

The politics of abortion

By JOEL N. SHURKIN
Knight News Service

Although abortion emerged as an issue in the presidential campaign last week, 31 per cent of Americans believe abortion is none of the government's business, according to a nationwide survey made by Knight-Ridder newspapers.

An overwhelming number of Catholics, whose religious organization has provided the main impetus for the "right-to-life" movement, support the idea that abortion is a private matter between a woman and her doctor, not something to be legislated.

The finding of the Knight-Ridder poll matches other public opinion surveys on abortion made in the past three years, all of which show a substantial majority of Americans support the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortions and oppose legislation curbing that decision.

The issue first began to grow several weeks ago during the Iowa pre-convention caucuses.

A newspaper column by Roland Evans and Robert Novak reported that former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter said that under certain circumstances he would support an amendment banning all abortions, legislation strongly urged by anti-abortion groups.

Carter later denied saying any such thing, leading to accusations by "right-to-life" forces that he was waffling on the issue.

Other candidates began feeling the heat, particularly Indiana Sen. Birch Bayh, the only one to completely support the Supreme Court decision. Candidates were harassed at rallies and, in several cases, were unable to complete speeches.

Last week the issue took on new importance when President Ford, trying to walk middle-ground between the two sides, issued a statement favoring a constitutional amendment giving states the right to decide the issue. He did not support an antiabortion amendment, although he said he did not agree with the court.

That statement appeared to satisfy no one, including Betty Ford, a supporter of abortion freedom.

Archbishop Joseph Bernardin of Cincinnati, who leads the U.S. bishop's antiabortion movement, called the decision "inconsistent and disappointing."

Gloria Steinem, a women's rights advocate, said Ford was advocating "lawlessness" by opposing the court decision.

All of this comes in the context of consistent public opinion surveys showing the "right-to-lifers" to be a small if vocal minority.

The Knight-Ridder survey, the most recent national poll, was made three weeks ago from a sample of 1,117 scientifically selected respondents. The margins of error in such a sample vary from be-

Toll hits 7,375 in Guatemala quake

Combined News Services

GUATEMALA CITY — Foreign disaster experts expressed fears Saturday that mass starvation and serious epidemics will envelop Guatemala in the aftermath of earthquakes that have killed at least 7,375 people by official count.

Ruined roads, broken bridges, landslides and fuel shortages blocked delivery of food into devastated areas outside Guatemala City and hundreds of aftershocks still rolled through the Central American country of 6 million persons.

Rescue workers uncovered more than 400 bodies in Chimaltenango, which is just off the Pan-American highway.

Officials claim the total number of dead is unknown in the village as it is throughout the rest of the country.

Messengers rode mules and bicycles into the capital with tales of whole communities leveled by the shaking earth, adding to the ever-mounting death toll.

The emergency relief committee said at least 7,375 persons had died since the first earthquake before dawn Wednesday. Unofficial estimates from foreign rescue workers put the toll as high as 14,000.

The U.S. Embassy said an American Mormon missionary working outside the capital had been seriously injured, the first reported casualty among the some 5,000 Americans living or traveling here. The missionary, who was not identified, was evacuated to the United States, the embassy said.

From 5 a.m. Friday until 5 a.m. Saturday the national observatory recorded 133 new tremors, which kept the devastated country in turmoil.

Health experts expressed fear that epidemics could cause more deaths because many dead were being buried in shallow graves, people were drinking untreated water and no sanitary facilities exist for thousands living in makeshift shelters in city streets.

Meanwhile, food and medical supplies from the United States began stacking up at the city's airport. The Guatemalan government Saturday ordered all private trucking companies to "donate" 50 per cent of their trucks to move the badly needed supplies to remote villages which up to this point have been cut off.

Government sources said they would later reimburse the truckers.

China's security chief named as Chou successor

By KAY TATEISHI

TOKYO (AP) — Hua Kuo-feng, the public security minister regarded by many observers as the most feared man in China, has been named acting premier to fill the post left vacant by the death of Chou En-lai.

Hua's appointment, confirmed Saturday both by the official Hsin-hua news agency and the Chinese Foreign Ministry in reply to queries by reporters in Peking, came as a complete surprise. One key official in Washington said he was stunned by the news.

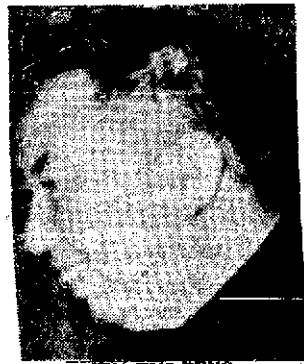

Other officials in Washington said the move reflected deep divisions within the Chinese hierarchy, but that changes in China's foreign policy and its attitude toward the United States were not immediately foreseen.

Among the first Americans to have a chance to get acquainted with Hua in his new role will be former President Nixon and his wife, Pat, who are scheduled to visit China on Feb. 21.

Many had expected that Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping, 71, who carried out most of the responsibilities of premier while Chou was ill, would become the new premier. Chou died Jan. 8.

Hua — whose age is variously reported to range from 54 to 65 — became minister of public security 13 months ago.

Observers noted that the Chinese Communist Party held its third plenary session of the 10th Central Committee in Peking early last week and that the naming of Chou's successor was expected.

But they said that, while Hua's appointment may have been the outcome of the session, Teng generally was favored by Chou — who helped Teng make a comeback after being denounced by Red Guards during the Cultural Revolution 10 years ago.

The appointment coincides with a blistering attack Friday in the People's Daily on "capitalist road-runners," which is viewed as criticism of the policy of pragmatism pursued by Chou and Teng.

The naming of Hua could mean that Teng is in a political dogfight with the radical Chinese left. A more extreme interpretation is that Teng has come to the end of his political rope and is once more a victim of his Cultural Revolution foes. A third possibility is that age

2 nations probing Lockheed

Japanese government may be overturned

By RICHARD HALLORAN
New York Times Service

TOKYO — Japan's governing party and business establishment have been rocked by revelations in Washington that the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. has paid $12.8 million to officials and executives to sell airplanes here.

The latest disclosures Friday pointed immediate suspicion at former Premier Kakuei Tanaka, who was forced to resign in December of 1974 because of allegations of financial irregularities.

Earlier, former Premier Nobusuke Kishi, who left office in 1960, was implicated through his close association with Yoshio Kodama, a right-wing lobbyist.

Tanaka and Kishi are both still members of Parliament and influential in the governing Liberal Democratic Party. Their associates have expressed concern that the suspicion of having taken bribes will spread from these two leaders to them.

One casualty of the billowing scandal has been a general election that was considered for the spring. Liberal Democratic Party leaders said Saturday it now would be "difficult" to hold the election then and indicated that it would be put off as long as possible. It must be held, under the Constitution, by December.

Dutch prince reported to have taken payoff

By PAUL KEMEZIS
New York Times Service

BRUSSELS — Revelations to a U.S. Senate subcommittee that the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. had paid $1.1 million to a high Dutch official to aid the 1959 sale of Starfighter jet aircraft to the Dutch forces has raised a storm around Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, who has been identified by a source in Washington as the official.

The prince's name was first linked with Lockheed two months ago by a former Lockheed employee, Ernst F. Hauser, who said he learned from a third source that the prince had accepted money from the company.

Saturday the Dutch press voiced strong suspicion that the prince, who is the husband of Queen Juliana and serves as inspector general of the Dutch armed forces, was the aide who was said by the Lockheed president and vice chairman, A. C. Koteles, to have received the money.

While the Senate subcommittee on multinationals has refused to reveal the name of the Dutch official, a source familiar with the investigation in Washington has also identified him as Prince Bernhard.

Friday night the Dutch Premier, Joop den Uyl, said at a news conference that the Dutch government had no reason at present to accuse the 65-year-old prince of wrongdoing, but he said that he had instructed the Dutch ambassador in Washington to obtain all evidence from the subcommittee that could implicate any Dutch official. Foreign Minister Max van der Stoep was in frequent contact with Washington Saturday concerning the affair.

Den Uyl stressed the need for good faith and fair play, but added that, if evidence arose that proved any Dutchman had been bribed, "we will not hesitate for a minute to take the necessary steps."

He also said that, if Prince Bernhard were involved, a special act of Parliament that would have to be signed by the queen would be required to bring him to trial.

Secret Witness sets jewel thief reward

On the night of last Dec. 30, a bandit forced his way into the home of Long Beach antique dealer and gem collector Bernard Kaplan and took $80,000 worth of jewelry at gunpoint.

On the next night, police found a portion of the loot in a flaming trash bin behind a market at 3750 E. Anaheim St., but Kaplan estimated the recovery at less than 10 per cent.

Secret Witness will pay $500 for information leading to the arrest and armed-robbery conviction of the gunman who committed the holdup, and the victim has pledged an additional $1,000. Kaplan also has pledged another $1,000 to be paid for recovery of the loss still outstanding, or any percentage of this amount for a like percentage recovered.

If you have such information, call Secret Witness at 436-2526 between 8 a.m. and midnight on weekdays, or from 3 to 11 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. Or write to Secret Witness, P.O. Box 67, Long Beach, Calif. 90801.

Carter leads in Oklahoma voting

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter led former Oklahoma Sen. Fred R. Harris by a slim margin in Saturday's Oklahoma Democratic precinct caucuses with more than half the votes in, but uncommitted delegates led the field.

With 1,558 precincts, or about 56 per cent, of the state's approximately 2,800 precincts reporting, 32.7 per cent of the delegates were uncommitted in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Carter led the other candidates with 21.5 per cent, followed by Harris with 19.4 per cent, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen with 13.1 per cent, and Alabama Gov. George Wallace with 12.2 per cent.

Carter led the field in the Iowa caucuses and holds the lead in month-long caucuses still under way in Maine. He finished second to Wallace in Mississippi.

There was only scattered support for other candidates or potential candidates who had not made major efforts in Oklahoma, including Minnesota Sen. Hubert Humphrey, Indiana Sen. Birch Bayh, former vice presidential nominee Sargent Shriver and Arizona Rep. Morris Udall.

Many of the state's rural areas were slow to report, and both Wallace and Bentsen supporters had predicted they would do well in those areas. Many of the precincts reporting Saturday night were in Oklahoma City and Tulsa.

Precinct officials are not required to report their vote until Tuesday and it appeared doubtful additional figures would be available immediately.

About half of the precincts tabulated were from Oklahoma and Tulsa counties. The rural vote was slow coming in, and both Wallace and Bentsen were counting on good showings in rural areas to strengthen their positions.

The caucuses are the first step toward selecting Oklahoma's 37 delegates to the national convention. Participants in the precinct meetings choose representatives to the Feb. 28 county conventions where delegate to the six congressional district conventions will be selected.

Lampoon, Plimpton shoot works

Combined News Services

Frightened residents, angry police officers and shaking buildings testified Saturday night to the Harvard Lampoon's attempt to set a world's firework record.

"It tied up all our lines, it's very poor relations for the Lampoon," said a harried Cambridge police sergeant in a telephone interview. "Twenty-seven emergency lines continuously busy!"

The loud, erratic explosions could be heard all over Cambridge and metropolitan Boston and prompted numerous calls to police and local news agencies.

The Lampoon — a leading college satire magazine — teamed up with man-about-everything George Plimpton and a pyrotechnic firm seeking to break the entry for fireworks listed in the Guinness Book of World Records.

"They had a permit, there's nothing we can do about it," the sergeant said Saturday night.

The "bomb" was tested in Long Island prior to Saturday night's attempt at the record. The challenge was the brain-storm of the Lampoon staff and former Lampooner, writer and fireworks fan Plimpton.

It was a special 10-foot-long mortar made of three-quarter-inch steel and set on a base plate of one-inch steel. It weighed 720 pounds.

"It's over," said one relieved Harvard University police officer. He said the fireworks lasted about a half hour. They were set off as part of the Lampoon's centennial celebration near Harvard Stadium on Soldier's Field Road.

It was not known if they broke the record, held by a Japanese fireworks company for its "Bouquet of Chrysanthemums," which is fired 3,000 feet into the air from a 36-inch mortar to produce a 2,000-foot diameter display.

Doorkeeper

A 22-year-old Zanesville, Ohio, college student has become the first woman to serve as a Senate doorkeeper.

Penelope Orr, a pre-law student on leave of absence from Miami University in Ohio, has been guarding a door to the third-floor visitor's gallery since January.

The gallery overlooks the Senate chamber in the Capitol. In the past, only men have been given the job. The House has yet to hire a woman doorkeeper.

The Senate sergeant-at-arms office has actually been hiring women for several years for door-watching duties. But an aide to Sen. Robert Taft Jr., R-Ohio, Miss Orr's sponsor, said none has ever been posted at doors to either the Senate chamber or galleries. They have been used for other chores, such as running messages.

Both House and Senate have had female pages for some time.

Miss Orr will be doorkeeper through April, when she will return to Ohio to continue her studies.

Death challenge

A man who escaped hanging after his 1942 murder conviction was overturned on a technicality has offered his neck for the noose as part of a campaign to get Parliament to abolish the death penalty in Canada.

Al Baldwin, 64, said in Ottawa that he would volunteer for a hanging ceremony on condition that the scaffold were erected on Parliament Hill and that two pro-death penalty legislators pulled the trap beneath him. He said the experience would prove to the MPs the senselessness of continuing the death penalty.

Baldwin, a retired government employee who was once known as Public Enemy No. 1 in Ontario province, has spent the past week around Parliament lobbying for a government bill to end the death penalty. It comes up for a vote Feb. 24.

Baldwin was sentenced to be hanged after admittedly killing a guard in a fight during an attempt to escape from a Toronto jail, where he was serving a sentence for bank robbery. He spent two years on death row before his conviction was reduced to manslaughter. He was released in 1960.

Recovering

Nancy Kissinger, wife of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, was reported in "excellent" condition Saturday in Boston after undergoing ulcer surgery that required removal of 40 per cent of her stomach.

Dr. George Nardl, chief surgeon for the operation at Massachusetts General Hospital, said Mrs. Kissinger would require one week to 10 days convalescence before being discharged.

Hospital officials had said that Mrs. Kissinger had a gastric ulcer for nine years and that the ulcer was in a healing phase and ideal for surgery. Doctors said that, when stomach ulcers continue despite medical treatment, surgery is indicated.

Editor

Izvestia, newspaper of the Soviet government, revealed in a round-about way Saturday the name of its new editor-in-chief.

He is Pyotr Alekseyev, chief editor of the daily Sovetskaya Rossiya since 1971 and a career journalist who has specialized in agriculture.

He replaces Lev Tolkunov, Izvestia's top editor since 1965. Officials confirmed last month that Tolkunov had been made director of the Soviet press agency Novosti.

Aleksyev is 62 and a candidate member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Before taking over the editorship of Sovetskaya Rossiya, organ of the Central Committee, five years ago, he was editor-in-chief of the agricultural daily Selskaya Zhizn.

Conscience

Sen. John O. Pastore, who is not running for reelection, has been the "conscience of the television industry," says a former president of CBS News.

Fred Friendly, the former CBS official, described Pastore, D-R.I., at a testimonial Friday night as a staunch defender of the First Amendment in TV news and the father of public broadcasting.

Friendly told a Rhode Island Press Club gathering that the 68-year-old senator cleared the way for birth of the Public Broadcasting System. Friendly also praised Pastore for opposing former President Richard Nixon's attacks on television news.

Lady Bird

A Canadian audience was treated to the accents of south Texas at a Winnipeg Symphony program commemorating the American Bicentennial.

Narrating the Declaration of Independence to Aaron Copland's "Fanfare for the Common Man" at the program Friday night was Lady Bird Johnson, widow of President Lyndon Johnson.

The program featured 20th Century American music.

"After one got used to it," one critic wrote afterward, "there was a certain charm about this gracious Texas lady's accent."

No conflict

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., denies that any conflict of interest may arise out of his wife's role in trying to arrange the sale to the Saudi Arabian government of a massive marble building on a site that had been restricted by Congress.

A spokesman for Hatfield said Saturday that, if the question comes before Congress, the Oregon Republican "won't participate in any deliberations on it, to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest."

Hatfield's wife, Annelmette, could earn up to several hundred thousand dollars by acting as real estate agent in the sale. The Washington building is valued by city tax assessors at $2.8 million, but some officials said it probably could sell for considerably more.

Pianist

Jazz pianist Vince Guaraldi, whose "Cast Your Fate to the Wind" won a gold record, has died of a sudden heart attack at the age of 47, the San Mateo County Coroner said Saturday in Menlo Park.

A native of San Francisco, Guaraldi previously played with such jazz greats as Benny Goodman, Dave Brubeck, Woody Herman and Cal Tjader. He also was known for his scoring of several "Peanuts" television specials and had just finished a new score for the next TV special.

He was found in his motel room by a member of his trio during a break in sets at a Menlo Park night club. His bass player said the pianist "had complained of feeling ill the last few days and had seen a physician."

Asylum

Egypt's President Anwar Sadat has granted political asylum to Omar el Mahshy, a former member of Libya's 11-man Revolutionary Command Council who was linked to a coup attempt last August, the official Middle East news agency reported Saturday in Cairo.

Mahshy reportedly fled to Tunisia after trying to overthrow Libyan President Muammar Khadafy.

The Middle East agency said Sadat granted asylum to Mahshy in line with "Arab tradition and in accordance with the established policy of making Egypt the safe haven for all Arabs." Sadat's decision is certain to further damage relations between the former allies, who once planned to merge Egypt and Libya into one state.

Charity

A solid silver table cigarette lighter that belonged to the late French President Charles de Gaulle was sold Saturday at an auction to benefit cancer research for $5,900 to the French jeweler Cartiers.

The lighter was donated to the charity by De Gaulle's widow. Cartiers was the only bidder.

De Gaulle, once a heavy smoker, gave up smoking completely in 1947.

12,000 diapers later

Mrs. Cheryl Shaf of north Chicago suburb of Morton Grove serves cake Sunday to her four surviving quintuplets. The four — from left, Derek, Tiffany, Vanessa and Adam — will be one year old Monday. Mrs. Shaf estimates she's been through 12,000 diapers, 500 gallons of milk and $14,000 for baby care. And she adds: "There's always someone up around the clock."

Jackson apologizes to Senate for handling of Hoffa probe

WASHINGTON (AP) —

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., has apologized to colleagues for the way a subcommittee he chairs handled a futile search last October for the body of former Teamsters President James Hoffa.

Jackson's apology was disclosed Friday by Chairman Abraham Ribicoff of the Senate Government Operations Committee and by Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., the committee's ranking minority member.

Ribicoff, D-Conn., said Jackson had apologized that the full committee had not been told about proceedings leading up to the search for Hoffa's body in a field in Oakland County, Mich.

"Sen. Jackson did apologize for what had taken place," Ribicoff told the Senate Rules Committee.

At issue is the flap that was created when staff members on Jackson's permanent investigations subcommittee — a unit of Ribicoff's committee — passed along a tip on the location of Hoffa's body to Michigan Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley.

Several other senators complained that the information — which proved to be valueless — should have been given to the FBI.

Percy told the Rules Committee he believed the situation had been "politicized," a reference to the fact that Kelley is chairman of the Jackson for President Committee in Michigan.

Jackson is seeking the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination.

"It should never have occurred," Percy told the Rules Committee.

Ribicoff and Percy said that Jackson's apology came at a recent closed meeting with Jackson and several staff members of the Government Operations Committee.

"I was deeply disturbed, and so was Sen. Percy," Ribicoff said. "Neither I nor Sen. Percy was informed of those proceedings."

Ribicoff said that Jackson had promised "that anytime this would ever happen (again) that Sen. Percy and I both would be informed."

Ribicoff and Percy had appeared before the Rules Committee to support the Government Operations Committee's upcoming budget for investigations and related work.

The Rules Committee has been holding hearings on the budgets of other Senate panels.

The Hoffa matter came up when Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., asked Ribicoff why the tip on Hoffa's body — which came from a confidential informant — had been given to Kelley instead of to the Justice Department or the FBI.

Sequestered in Holiday Inn

Combined News Services

SAN FRANCISCO — The Patricia Hearst jury, after two days of watching movies filmed by bank surveillance cameras, took a day off Saturday and went to the movies.

Somebody with a wry sense of humor selected for their viewing pleasure a movie called "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," which is about people sequestered in a lunatic asylum.

The jurors are sequestered so that they cannot be affected by outside influences during the trial of the Hearst heiress.

Their prison is a Holiday Inn eight blocks from the federal courthouse. Here the entire 14th floor has been secured so that they will have no contact with anything or anybody who might sway their consideration.

Every member of the seven-woman, five-man panel has a separate room that she or he cannot leave between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. They have a recreation room with TV and reading matter, but programs and publications are censored to eliminate any references to the trial. While the TV is on, a deputy marshal is present with a remote control instrument that he can use to cut a program if anything is said on screen about Patricia Hearst.

An alarm system has been installed to give warning if any unauthorized person appears on the 14th floor. Waitresses and maids at the motel have been investigated to insure they have no connection with the case.

During the weekend a beautician will visit any female juror who wants to doll herself up. The panel also will be taken on a bus trip, probably to scenic Marin County.

Each juror is allowed two alcoholic drinks with dinner. "There was a case where jurors were allowed five drinks," said Chief Deputy Marshal John

Brophy. "It was found to be unwise."

Saturday, accompanied by a marshal, one of the jurors, a Seventh Day Adventist, went to church. The service lasted three hours. Today, those jurors who wish also will be allowed to attend church.

On Monday, the panel returns to the courtroom where the prosecution is still presenting testimony about the robbery of the Hibernia bank in April 1974 by Miss Hearst and members of the Symbionese Liberation Army. The task of the jurors is to decide whether she acted out of fear, or enthusiasm for, the SLA.

Rain to keep on falling

More rain is due in the Southland today as a five-day-old storm continues to make up for a rainless January.

National Weather Service forecasters said the storm had dumped more than two inches of rain in the area by late Saturday. They predicted occasional rain today with some local downpours.

The forecasters added, though, that the most rain would fall in the mountains, where an influx of subtropical moisture was predicted to dump three to five inches of rain by tonight.

The warmer air also should lift the snow level, which was down to about 3,500 feet Friday, back to the 7,000-to-8,000-foot level, forecasters said.

California Highway Patrol officials predicted a massive traffic jam in the San Bernardino Mountains this afternoon when weekend travelers begin the journey home.

Officials said the traffic jam, expected to be complicated by weather conditions, could delay motorists as long as five hours descending from Big Bear to San Bernardino.

Motorists planning to spend the day in the mountains were advised to take chains because of intermittent snow showers.

Forecasters said Southland temperatures would remain chilly, with highs near 58 in coastal areas.

$1,000 welder taken by thieves

Burglars who used a passkey or picked the gate lock to enter the storage yard at Rampart General, Inc., 6956 Cherry Ave., took an arc welder valued at $1,000, Long Beach police reported Saturday.

Moscow radiation hazard to staff in U.S. embassy

WASHINGTON (AP)—American Embassy staff members in Moscow have been warned they may have been exposed to dangerous levels of radiation stemming from some type of sophisticated Soviet listening or jamming equipment, sources said Saturday.

State Department spokesman Robert Funnell said he could not comment on the subject. But other sources said the embassy staff was told in a secret briefing by Ambassador Walter J. Stoessel Jr. that there may be a potential medical problem because of the Soviet equipment.

One source said shields are being installed in embassy windows to protect American personnel.

It was not clear what type of device might be producing the radiation or if the U.S. government has been able to identify the Soviet equipment.

A source said embassy officials became concerned about detection of high radiation levels in December and tried to pin down the source.

The source said the investigation was complicated by the fact that the embassy was surrounded by Soviet buildings, any of which might have been the source of the radiation.

State to check schools for chemical hazards

SACRAMENTO (AP)—Science laboratories of California colleges and high schools will be checked for cancer-causing chemicals, the state Department of Industrial Relations said Sunday.

Donald Vial, state director of industrial relations, said he is convening a meeting Monday in San Francisco of public and private school administrators in response to a "hazard alert" issued by the federal government.

Vial said the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) found the potential cancer-causing chemicals were being used "without precaution" in schools in eastern states.

He said 14 chemicals were on the list. OSHA recommended removing them from schools or marking them as hazardous and setting up special storage procedures if they remain in schools.

A spokesman for Vial said he had no first-hand knowledge of any of the chemicals being used today in California schools. He said the meeting Monday will take up that issue and come up with procedures for reporting chemicals and correcting possible incidents of hazardous exposure.

"General patterns of usage make it likely that exposure, if any, may be occurring in college laboratories, and possibly to a lesser extent in high schools," Vial said in a prepared statement.

Vial said representatives of University of California, the state university and college system and public schools will attend the meeting.

Doctor held in probe of ex-wife's murder

WEST COVINA (AP)—A doctor has been booked for investigation of murder in the death of his former wife, authorities say.

Police said Dr. Richard Charles Ey, 42, was arrested in La Jolla Friday for the death of Marilyn Heller Ey, 41, whose body was found in his apartment. Police said Mrs. Ey, who lived in Tustin, had been dead eight to 10 days. An autopsy was scheduled.

Investigators said her body was discovered by a policeman who had gone to Ey's apartment to arrest him for failing to appear in a court case. He had been scheduled for arraignment on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon after he allegedly beat his former wife with a towel rack.

Police said Mrs. Ey had posted the $1,000 bail to free her former husband from jail on that charge.

Wilson Riles, state superintendent of public schools, said: "We are taking immediate steps to alert schools to the potential dangers of these chemicals. I am pleased that the possible hazards of these chemicals has been brought to the attention of educators."

Man linked to 3,000 thefts

A Hollywood-area bartender, arrested last week on car-theft warrants, apparently was responsible for more than 3,000 auto burglaries last year, authorities said Saturday.

Police said Stephen Burdick, 28, told them he broke into about 5,000 cars last year and stole items that were later sold for cash to purchase about $80,000 worth of cocaine. Investigators, however, said they thought Burdick's figure was too high, adding they suspected him of about 3,000 auto burglaries. They estimated that he took about $250,000 worth of merchandise from the cars.

Ford in N.H., says economy 'up'

By DON McLEOD

NASHUA, N.H. (AP) — President Ford left for the aid of his New Hampshire campaign Saturday, encouraging supporters and claiming his disciplined approach is saving the economy.

Ford hit New Hampshire, where his second-term bid admittedly faces one of its stiffest tests in the Feb. 24 primary, on a high note of economic improvement.

"Tramping coast-to-coast through the snow, shaking hands along reception lines and fielding questions in a budget briefing, Ford worked for an image of calm responsibility while his described challenger Ronald Reagan was too controversial for New England taste.

"The economic discipline we have maintained is justified by this week-end's statistics," Ford told the Nashua Chamber of Commerce.

"They report that the unemployment rate just took the sharpest monthly drop in over 17 years," he said.

Before Ford's arrival at the Chamber of Commerce dinner, his effigy was burned near the high school where the banquet was held.

The 200 demonstrators, members of the People's Bicentennial Commission, claimed the President was linked too closely to big business. Many bands of the group have trailed Reagan during his trips to New Hampshire.

The demonstrators had intended to picket the front of the high school, but dispersed after being ordered to do so by State Police and Secret Service agents. Authorities said they did not want the demonstrators near the presidential party.

Ford sought to downplay recession as a political issue at the same time he claimed credit for an economic upturn reflected in the January unemployment figure of 7.3 per cent, down from 8.3 per cent in December.

"Make no mistake, things were not good this time last year," Ford said. Then he hit his standard campaign theme that better days are coming because of his "hard decisions and difficult compromises" in 1975.

Udall says Nixon trip to China unwise

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — As President Ford arrived here Saturday, U.S. Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., criticized former President Nixon's planned China trip, terming the proposed visit "a serious mistake."

Udall, on the presidential primary campaign trail in New Hampshire's largest city, urged Ford to ask Nixon to suspend the trip.

"I would hope in a delicate way the President and (Secretary of State Henry) Kissinger would urge him (Nixon) not to go. Of course, Mr. Nixon is a private citizen and, if the Chinese ask him, there is nothing we can do."

"But all this visit can do is remind the world and the American people of the entire Watergate disgrace. Nixon has poor judgment about this. In his own mind, he does not see himself as a disgraced president, but part of history and this trip is to bolster him psychologically."

Simon assails government size, spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — Big government was under persistent attack at the Northeast Republican Conference Saturday. Treasury Secretary William E. Simon criticized "the creeping and excessive rise" in federal government, declaring that one in every three dollars of income is spent by the government.

It was also a year of new realism that taught us something important about America," Ford said. "It restored common sense and discipline."

Earlier, a campaign official acknowledged for the first time a planned strategy of chipping away at Reagan through criticism of his record and campaign proposals and claimed it was working.

Peter Kaye, spokesman for the Ford campaign, said Reagan is on the defensive and being viewed "as something of a political opportunist, a vacillator, a backer of controversial if not outright screwy schemes."

Ford, meantime, was calling for patience and warned against "false promises" presumably from both the Democratic

"It took many years of combined with a four-fold increase in international oil prices, to create the economic difficulties of 1974 and 1975," Ford said.

"It will take several years of sound policies and reasoned restraint to restore sustained, non-inflationary growth," he said.

The rest of the day, Ford was busy with traditional campaign activity, braving the near-zero weather to shake hands with well-wishers along the snowbanked roads, speaking to local officials and campaign supporters and dropping in on a nursing home.

At the Greenbriar Health Care Center, Ford made an unscheduled stop to greet and be photographed with Richard Chaput, an author and lecturer who has been paralyzed by polio since childhood.

It was at the same nursing home that then-President Nixon made a health-care-reform speech in 1972 in his only primary visit to New Hampshire.

Ford's wife, Betty, and daughter, Susan, meanwhile, set off on separate campaign appearances.

Mrs. Ford spent most of Saturday visiting mentally retarded children in Salem before going to Ford campaign headquarters in Nashua to make telephone calls to registered Republicans.

Susan said a brief visit to a ski area in Conway and presented an award to Olympic ski team member David Currier, who broke his leg during pre-Olympic trials in Austria. She then headed for appearances at a reception and a junior high school dance.

Ford, on his first campaign swing through New Hampshire, had some kind words about the state's skiing as well as promising economic recovery.

The President told his New Hampshire airport supporters that he had skied in New Hampshire in the 1960s, and he said Susan would hit the slopes at Conway on Sunday.

Bringing up an unfavorable comment about New Hampshire skiing conditions that Press Secretary Ron Nessen made last fall, Ford said with a smile that he was thinking of "taking him (Nessen) up to a dead wall (steep cliff) and pushing him over."

WIND TOUSLES the hair of Susan and Betty Ford as they walk with the President to Air Force One Saturday at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington.

Media too demanding, says Carter

By DICK PETTY

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter says he wants "to be examined closely" in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination. But he says he has trouble answering some questions about his personal beliefs, including his views on abortion, and he thinks the news media demand too many specifics from candidates.

Carter, 51, who made a strong showing in early Democratic presidential caucuses in Iowa, Maine and Mississippi, said much criticism directed against him was unjustified — including assertions that he was vague on some proposals and that he misled voters on his stands on abortion and right-to-work laws.

But, he said, "I want to be examined closely. If I can't withstand the examination, then I don't deserve to be president."

He said he believed the 1976 presidential election would revolve around voter confidence, not around whether a candidate is identified with exclusively liberal or conservative causes.

Critics have accused Carter of clouding his abortion views to win votes from the anti-abortion faction in Iowa and changing his position on right-to-work laws to win labor support.

"I never have taken but one position on the issue of abortion. My statements don't completely please the right-to-life people," Carter said. "My statements don't completely please the abortionists. But my position has never changed. I think abortion's wrong. I don't think government ought to do anything to end abortions."

He said he believed the need for abortions should be minimized through education, family planning and "better adoption procedures." He said his position has been "to some degree" influenced by a feeling that the U.S. Constitution should not be "amended frequently unless there's some abridgment of rights."

This exchange followed:

Q: "If you do not favor abortions, yourself, why do you not favor a constitutional amendment prohibiting abortion?"

A: "Because I don't favor the total prohibition against abortion. Nor do I favor every state having a different law on abortions. That's what the right-to-life people want. I don't agree with them."

Q: "Would you support a constitutional amendment allowing abortions in such restricted cases as rape or probable birth defects?"

A: "I don't favor it." Carter said he has not provided specifics for many of his proposals, such as reorganizing the federal bureaucracy or stimulating the economy to provide jobs, but he said candidates should not be expected to go into great detail on such proposals.

"There is a responsibility for any candidate to let the people know clearly how the candidate feels on broad concepts and on as many specifics as possible."

Carter said, "But to say that every time a candidate comes out with a proposal that he's got to have the last details ... is a ridiculous demand."

Carter said that just as his position on the abortion question has never changed, his position has never changed on right-to-work laws. A syndicated columnist has written that there is evidence Carter once supported those laws, which prohibit denial of a job to a person who does not wish to join a labor union.

"I've never felt strongly enough about right-to-work to take it on as a crusade," Carter said, adding that he told Georgia labor leaders in 1970 what he tells national labor leaders now. "If they got it through the legislature ... I would sign it into law."

But most voters will be more concerned about electing a person they have confidence in, he said, than about choosing someone who identifies with a certain issue.

Reagan plan for SS: Invest fund in stocks

Combined News Services

RONALD REAGAN In Florida Saturday

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan Saturday suggested investing Social Security money in the stock market as a possible solution to a deficit he says is growing in the Social Security system.

Reagan also conceded that the liberalized abortion bill he signed as governor of California led to an "abortion on demand" practice in many of that state's hospitals.

He added that he would not make the same "mistake" today.

Reagan said that he had not yet come up with a firm plan for where the money would come from to make the changes in Social Security he says are needed.

He said, however, that one alternative could be "investing Social Security trust funds in industry."

Reagan said he would fund outside Social Security where people are totally dependent on the money they contribute," Reagan told a news conference before speaking at a Florida Jaycees convention.

A luncheon, before about 1,500 Jaycees, Reagan gave his standard speech reviling big government and outlining his record as California governor.

The Jaycees interrupted him with applause as he blasted welfare spending, the federal bureaucracy, détente, the United Nations, and abortion.

The Californian has taken a strong position against liberalized abortion law in his campaigning for the Republican nomination for president, and said he would support a constitutional amendment overthrowing the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling liberalizing the basis for abortion.

His decision, repeated in nearly every stop in New Hampshire, where "Right to Life" groups have made abortion a major campaign issue, is that he opposes abortion in all circumstances except when a mother's life is imperiled by her pregnancy.

In 1967, during his first year as governor, he signed a bill that went beyond this position, allowing abortions when there was a threat to both the physical and mental health of the patient and if the pregnancy was the product of rape or incest.

Reagan, returning to the Florida campaign trail after three days in New Hampshire and North Carolina, said that the California abortion law had been subverted by medical professionals, particularly those in the mental-health field, who in practice assisted any woman who sought to abort a pregnancy.

"If I had it to do all over again I would have more restrictions than I agreed to," the candidate said under questioning from newsmen. "I placed too much faith in those who were entrusted... with insuring that the patient met the terms of the bill."

He said he had specifically refused to sign a bill that allowed abortion "simply because of the inconvenience of an unwed mother." Similarly, he continued, he forced the deletion from the bill of a clause that would have permitted abortion when the gross deformity of a fetus was expected, as in cases when the mother had taken thalidomide or had been exposed to rubella.

He agreed to the provision on rape, he said, because that seemed to be a logical extension of the "self-defense" theory, although the mother's life no longer was endangered.

"And I included mental health, and I found in that particular field there was the greatest leeway, that in that field the professionals who were supposed to judge were giving rapid off-the-cuff diagnoses of possible mental health. This is what opened it up to the place where a great many—particularly among unwed mothers—it became virtually abortion on demand. I wouldn't make that mistake again."

Also appearing at the convention was Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp, a Democratic candidate in Florida's March 9 primary.

Ford readies major arms sale to Egypt

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Ford administration, seeking to strengthen Washington's ties with Cairo, was reported Saturday close to a major decision to consult with congressional leaders on ending a long-standing ban on the sale of military equipment to Egypt.

High administration officials have said in interviews that a final determination had not yet been made on the controversial question.

But they said that various recommendations on how to proceed toward lifting the embargo were at the White House — the result of weeks of interagency discussions in which the State Department took the lead.

Because of the extreme political sensitivity of the issue in this election year, the administration has been moving cautiously.

Officials said they were aware that any decision to sell military equipment to Egypt would cause concern in Israel and among Israeli supporters in Congress and elsewhere. Thus, the officials said, the administration was determined to take no action without first consulting congressional leaders and committees.

President Anwar Sadat, who has broken Egypt's once close ties with the Soviet Union, has urged the United States for the past two years to lift the embargo and allow him to purchase a wide range of military equipment to help Egypt compensate for the loss of Soviet arms.

President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger have privately and publicly shown their sympathy toward Sadat's problems. Ford, in fact, said in an interview last September that he believed the United States had "an implied commitment" to sell Egypt certain equipment.

When Sadat was here in October he discussed military sales with intensity on the matter, but no decisions were made. Officials have been working intensely since then and categories of military equipment sought by Egypt have been under study.

The requests from Sadat are wide-ranging. They include C-130 military transport planes, Hawk antiaircraft missiles, tow antitank weapons, radar and communications equipment, naval patrol boats and F-5E jet fighter planes.

At the moment, Sadat has asked for early action on his request for sale of six C-130's, which would cost Egypt a total of about $30 to $40 million, a high-ranking State Government official said.

"It has become a prestige item for Egypt," the official said.

A presidential determination would be needed to allow the sale, but the administration has also told Congress that nothing would be done without prior consultation.

More energy homes eyed

By MARC WILSON

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Federal officials say a pilot "energy home" building program in Arkansas may be expanded to other states if it continues to produce a 60 per cent to 85 per cent savings in residential energy consumption.

Arkansas Power and Light Co. says data from the fewer than 200 homes built under the pilot program thus far have shown the high percentage of energy savings. And it says utility bills for residents of the energy homes are about half the amount of bills received by residents of conventionally built houses.

The pilot program homes use twice as much insulation as in conventional homes, have substantially reduced window space and restricted areas for the use of heat-producing appliances.

The program was established in 1973. The federal Department of Housing and Urban Development granted a local exception in building standards to permit construction of the energy homes with federally insured loans.

A report on the project was filed with HUD last year, and the department is considering distributing information about it nationwide, according to Roger Zachritz, deputy area director of the Little Rock HUD office.

Raymond Eveland, program marketing coordinator for the Department of Commerce office in Dallas, said he may organize a 10-state program to promote the energy home as a major energy conservation tool.

According to Commerce

Department figures, 1.5 million homes will be built in the United States this year. The department estimates that 19 per cent of the nation's energy is consumed by residential use.

"You can see what a potential for energy savings we have in this project," Eveland said. "I think we may be at the stage to try this on a larger scale."

William Young, chief of the loan-guarantee section of the Veteran's Administration regional office, said the VA has approved loans for 135 energy homes.

"As a government agency we promote anything that saves energy," Young said. "Also, the price of housing has gone up recently so much that many veterans can't qualify for loans anymore. But when we know their utility bills are going to be cut in half, we're more likely to approve a loan in a marginal case."

Residents of the new-style homes say they're generally happy with their houses, although almost all say they don't like the 8 per cent limit on window space.

"We're quite satisfied," said Bob Finch, who moved into an energy home in Jacksonville last summer. "So far no problems, except maybe the windows are smaller than we'd like."

Connie Jacobus, a real estate agent and housing contractor, said she was "very skeptical at first. I thought it was a gimmick, something some pirate had come up with. But the homes are really better for the builder, better for the buyer and better for the general public."

12 die as train, camper collide

BECKEMEYER, Ill. (AP) — Twelve young people out for an evening of roller skating were killed Saturday night when their camper truck was struck by a freight train at an unguarded crossing.

An ambulance driver said bodies were strewn along two-fifths of a mile of track in the heart of this community east of St. Louis.

State police said 16 persons were packed into the recreational vehicle. They were thought to be members of two families.

The dead were all 18 or under, except for the driver, Henry Lowe of rural Carlyle, grandfather of several of the victims.

The four injured were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital in nearby Breese, with three of them listed in serious condition.

"It was an unprotected crossing," said State Police Sgt. William Pierce.

"No lights, no gates, no nothing."

The Baltimore & Ohio freight train was west-bound toward St. Louis when it struck the truck on the driver's side.

Despite bitterly cold temperatures, there was no evidence of ice or snow at the crossing, which rises about four feet to the tracks. The night was clear, with a bright half-moon.

Police Chief Robert Phillips said the camper was either going to or coming from a roller rink, probably the one in nearby Highland. Orvin Leonard of Beckemeyer, one of the wrecking crew, said there were at least 10 pairs of roller skates inside the camper.

Phillips reported that engineer O.J. Cores of rural Washington, Ind., said the train was traveling at about 55 miles an hour.

Memo questions CIA's authority for covert actions

By JOHN CREWSDON
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON—The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence has obtained a copy of a memorandum, drawn up last year for the CIA director, that one committee source described as raising "serious questions" about the constitutionality of covert military and political operations undertaken by the United States between 1947 and the passage of the Foreign Assistance Act in 1974.

The memorandum, a copy of which was obtained by the New York Times, was produced last September by a group of legal researchers under contract to the intelligence community staff, an umbrella group that works for the CIA director in his capacity as coordinator of the federal intelligence agencies.

The Senate source said it appeared to lawyers

ly been shared by Congress, whose approval is required for treaties, declarations of war and funds for their conduct, and the president, who under the Constitution negotiates treaties and serves as commander-in-chief of the nation's military forces.

The collection of foreign intelligence necessary to the formulation of foreign policy, it said, is an executive function that can be carried out by the President, through the CIA and other executive agencies, without supporting legislation.

Nor, it continued, is there any doubt about the President's authority to use covert or other means, in his capacity as the supreme military commander, "to meet the threats of war or national emergency."

But the memorandum declares that until the passage of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1974, "there was serious doubt that the CIA had authority to engage in covert operations involving the use of political and military force against, or in support of, a foreign government or its leaders."

Such actions, the researchers wrote, amounted to the implementation of foreign policy, a shared function that had not been wholly delegated to the President, or through him to the CIA, by Congress in the National Security Act.

Act, which limits the authority of the President to use appropriated funds to finance covert political or military operations in foreign countries, requires him to first report to Congress the importance of such operations to the national security.

"Any question as to whether the President can authorize covert operations," the report stated, "has now been removed" by the passage of the Foreign Assistance Act.

But it added that, although "differences of opinion" on the question have existed among those inside the CIA and others outside it, it was "doubtful" that the agency was intended by Congress before 1974 to have the autonomous power "to implement foreign policy by the use of covert means targeted against foreign elements."

"The theory that the President has unrestricted sovereign power to authorize covert operations as long as they do not violate international law cannot be supported, the study concluded.

EXCLUSIVE

who had obtained the memorandum that it was "important in undercutting the theory" with which the CIA has justified initiating covert operations without first seeking the approval of Congress.

The CIA has argued that the President's inherent powers to control some aspects of foreign and military affairs, along with the language of the 1947 National Security Act that established the CIA, have made congressional authorization unnecessary.

One senior intelligence official asserted Saturday that the 1975 memorandum had no official status as a policy document within the CIA, since it had been approved neither by the agency's general counsel nor its special counsel.

The official added that the 48-page paper had been prepared largely by three law students among those hired for the intelligence community staff's legal research project last summer.

Nonetheless, the paper is considered a crucial document by the Senate Intelligence Committee, which is known to be preparing a study that is expected to argue against the President's inherent power to launch covert operations on his own, because of the papers' acceptance by the intelligence community staff, where one source said it had been widely read and discussed.

One government lawyer said that the acceptance of the memorandum by the intelligence community staff did not amount to an internal admission by the CIA that its stated policy over the past two decades had been badly founded in law.

But the lawyer and others familiar with the legal questions involved said they believed that the memorandum's expressions of doubt about the inherent powers argument was "a more accurate reflection of the state of the law" than the CIA's formal position on the matter.

That position, presented to the House Select Committee on Intelligence last December by Mitchell Rogovin, the CIA's special counsel, concludes that in addition to the President's inherent constitutional authority to conduct foreign affairs and the wording of the National Security Act, authorization for covert operations could be found in the ratification by Congress over the past 28 years of "the authority of the agency to plan and conduct covert action."

The research paper, which notes at its outset that it was prepared at the request of the intelligence community's coordinating staff on the basis of a recommendation by the CIA's general counsel, makes a distinction between covert activities designed to gather intelligence and those aimed at influencing through political or military means the internal affairs of another country.

The paper notes that authority in the field of foreign affairs has historical-

Field question

I live about 15 blocks from the beach in East Long Beach, and I'd like to know if the oil pumped through the off-shore drilling platforms comes from under my property? I own the oil rights on my property, and I'd like to know if I'm eligible for any royalties. Maybe this is just wishful thinking on my part, but I'd really like to get an answer. Mrs. R.M., Long Beach.

All Long Beach residents who are entitled to royalties from oil island production are receiving them and have been for about 10 years, said John Parkin of the Long Beach Department of Oil Properties. The underground oil pool does extend inland about two miles in certain sections of the Westside, but your area is not included in the tidelands oil project. The southeastern boundary of the underground pool is near the Belmont Pier and, in the East Long Beach area, the deposit does not extend very far inland. There are about 10,000 Long Beach lots in the productive area.

Note worthy?

In 1969 I gave a restaurant cashier in Michigan a $5 bill for my meal, and she told me I didn't want to spend the bill because it was worth at least $7.50. Upon closer scrutiny, I saw that the words United States Note were written on it instead of Federal Reserve Note and that the serial numbers were printed in red ink rather than green. I have inquired about its value at banks and have received nothing but blank looks. Can Action Line find out if such notes are more valuable than their printed face value? C.N., Westminster.

If your $5 bill is used, it's worth $5, said Dean Duffy, authority on currency at Liberty Coin Co., 1053 South St. If you want more than that for it, he suggested you "put it in a savings account and let it draw interest." An unused, crisp bill like yours is valued in collectors' manuals at $30, but Duffy said he recently sold two of them for $15 each. The selling price depends on supply and demand, he said. He said he couldn't say if your bill will be worth more as time goes on. The bill is called a Legal Tender Note and it and bills in denominations of $1, $2 and $100 were first printed in 1928. A crisp 1928 $5 bill might be worth as much as $50, Duffy said. The $5 Legal Tender Note was last printed in 1963. Only the $100 bill is still being printed.

Renter rebate

We hear constantly that the state is in need of tax money. How is it that we renters get a tax rebate on our state income tax returns? Where does the money come from? H.J., Long Beach.

The money for the renters' refundable credit, or rebate, comes from the state's general fund, according to Kenneth White, senior tax representative of the State Franchise Tax Board. The rationale behind the renters' tax rebate — from $25 to $45, depending on the individual's adjusted gross income — is that, since homeowners are given a break on their property taxes through their homeowners' exemptions, renters, who contribute to property taxes through their rent payments, should be entitled to a similar benefit.

Charge

My wife and I applied to the Broadway Department Stores for credit cards several years ago, and to our knowledge, we never used them. We destroyed and discarded them shortly after receiving them. Recently, we were refused credit elsewhere on the grounds that the Broadway had not been able to collect an $18.56 charge they say we made. We have contacted the Broadway several times but have been unable to find out what they say we bought. If we did get something there we want to pay for it, but we don't want to pay a bill if it isn't ours. Can you help us clear up this matter? A.M., Cerritos.

At Action Line's request, Broadway sent you a photo copy of the sales ticket showing merchandise your wife bought in 1973. You have now sent Broadway a check for the amount owed. A spokeswoman for Broadway told us they had tried to collect the charge before they turned it over to a credit reporting agency, but you maintain you never received a bill, and that although you moved after the charge was made other mail had been forwarded to you.

Survey finds abortion foes 'vocal minority'

tween 2 and 3 per cent and 5 per cent, depending on how many answered each question.

The survey asked if respondents agreed or disagreed with the following statement: "If a woman wants to have an abortion that is a matter for her and her doctor to decide and the government should have nothing to do with it."

Of all those asked, 81 per cent agreed, 15 per cent disagreed and 4 per cent said they did not know.

When broken down by religion, 82 per cent of Protestants and 98 per cent of Jews agreed with the statement. Of the Catholics asked, 76 per cent agreed, 21 per cent disagreed and 3 per cent said they did not know.

Political party made little difference. Eighty-five per cent of Republicans and those who considered themselves independents agreed with the no-legislation statement, while 78 per cent of Democrats agreed. The difference could be because most Catholics are Democrats, but even then the effect is minimal.

Age made no statistical difference in the Knight-Ridder survey.

As with all public-opinion surveys, much depends on how the question is asked. In the Knight-Ridder poll, the question might have a tendency to elicit a positive response.

This, however, would not alter the fact that the difference between Protestants and Catholics is only 8 per cent, much smaller than it would be if Catholics as a whole agreed with the "right-to-life" movement or stated Church dogma.

Other polls have shown similar results. Depending on how the question is asked, Gallup, Harris and NBC News polls have shown a spread of 54 to 75 per cent of a majority supporting the court ruling.

A survey made in 1974 by DeVries Associates of 4,067 people (an unusually high number for a public opinion survey), showed that, contrary to church dogma, U.S. Catholics favored abortion to save a woman's life, her physical or mental health. They also favored it after a rape. Twenty-nine per cent even favored abortion if the couple felt they could not afford another child.

All this raises the question of how abortion became a political issue, particularly since the President of the United States has nothing to do with court decisions or constitutional amendments.

Merrie Spaeth of Planned Parenthood in New York said she thinks the issue is largely created by the media, which keeps questioning candidates about their opinions. She said it has so far not "normalized" as an issue because everyone thinks it is controversial, ignoring evidence it really is not.

"The candidates are really 10 years behind the public," she said.

There were 900,000 legal abortions in the United States in 1974, the last year in which there are figures. There were another 200,000 illegal ones, Ms. Spaeth said.

Philip Meyers, who headed the Knight-Ridder poll, said the survey indicates the issue is alive because the Catholic vote has not yet solidified around any one candidate. When it does, he said, abortion will probably not be a factor.

Japanese top party in trouble

The Lockheed controversy was the topic of discussion at an emergency meeting of Liberal-Democratic leaders Saturday morning. The leaders established a special investigating committee headed by a former minister of justice and sent a member of Parliament to the Lockheed headquarters in Los Angeles and to Washington to gather information.

Over the next few days, a flock of Japanese politicians from the opposition parties is also scheduled to visit Lockheed's home office and to call on a United States Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, to glean as much information as possible.

The Liberal-Democratic leaders also decided to agree to an opposition demand that those allegedly involved in the scandal be summoned to testify before a parliamentary committee, probably in the next few days.

Meantime, the Japan Socialist Party, the main opposition group, threatened to bring debate in Parliament to an indefinite halt unless a full-scale investigation was held. This is an especially effective time of year for such a threat since the annual budget and major measures to combat the prolonged recession are on the agenda.

Whether Parliament will be able to call Kodama, 65, remained uncertain, since his whereabouts are not known. The Lockheed affair apparently began when he used his connections with Kishi in 1959 to have Japan's Air Self-Defense Force buy the Lockheed F 104 instead of another jet fighter plane it had recommended.

An additional source of embarrassment for the United States was the fact that James D. Hodgson, the American ambassador here, had a long career as a Lockheed executive before being named undersecretary and, later, secretary of labor. Hodgson has denied any involvement in the affair, and sources familiar with his career noted that as corporate vice president for industrial relations he had not been directly involved in any of the company's international operations.

The disclosures in Washington Friday, which became known here early Saturday morning because of the 14-hour time difference, centered on testimony by A.C. Kotchian, Lockheed's president and vice chairman, that he had enlisted the help of Kenji Osano to sell the L1011 Tristar jet air bus here.

The reports about Osano sent tremors through the ranks of the conservative governing party and whetted the political appetites of the opposition, because he is a confidant and financial backer of Tanaka.

Tanaka was in office in 1972, when All Nippon Airways chose between the Lockheed plane and several others for its domestic routes. The airline needed government approval, through the Ministry of Transportation, to make its choice.

Moreover, Osano is the largest individual shareholder in All Nippon Airways, with 11 million shares, which make up 2 per cent of the total.

In an attempt to aid the poor, the government ordered a $5,000 fine and one year in jail as a mandatory sentence for increasing food prices. They also issued a list of staple foods and the costs that would enable the city's poor to continue eating as long as foodstuffs held out.

Soldiers were posted Saturday night on street corners also, in a government attempt to prevent looting and damage to homes.

Prince tied to payoffs

Kotchian, in testimony Friday before the Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, gave details of how Lockheed had paid large bribes overseas to help promote its sales. The company had previously acknowledged that such payments totaled at least $22 million.

Saturday in The Hague, the Dutch capital, a spokesman for Prince Bernhard said that the prince had in the past strongly denied accusations similar to those that arose Friday and that he had no new statement to make.

Den Uyl said at his news conference that he had discussed the matter with Prince Bernhard a few months ago when the first accusations arose and that after those talks he had seen no ground for suspicion or for government action.

Prince Bernhard's name had also been linked with the Northrop Corp. earlier this year as a result of U. S. Senate hearings. During testimony that a Dutch businessman, Teengs Gerritsen, had been paid to represent Northrop interests in the Netherlands, it was disclosed that Northrop president Thomas V. Jones had at one time contacted the prince, who was an old acquaintance, for advice in choosing a Northrop representative in the Netherlands.

Prince Bernhard, who is best known to the public as the head of the World Wildlife Foundation and organizer of the Bilderberg International Affairs discussion groups, has also acted for a long time as a goodwill ambassador for Dutch business interests.

San Pedro man stabbed to death

A 19-year-old San Pedro man was stabbed to death in a possible robbery outside a Santa Ana apartment complex Saturday night, police said.

Officers said the body of Robert Salceda, 19, was found sprawled on the sidewalk in front of an apartment at 902 S. Townsend St. at 7:50 p.m.

His empty wallet was found nearby, Detective G.R. Clark said.

Salceda recently moved from Santa Ana, and his San Pedro address wasn't immediately known, Clark added.

They also warned that thieves posing as Red Cross workers have entered numerous homes and robbed the residents.

Fearing widespread epidemics, President Kjell Eugenio Laugerud Friday night ordered mass vaccinations and the immediate burial of the dead in common graves.

The national railway system is paralyzed and predictions are that it will be weeks before it can operate again.

and illness have taken their toll and that Teng has decided to bow out of the premiership race voluntarily.

Hua received praise during the Cultural Revolution for his ability to organize great masses of people. Later he made a reputation for himself through his deft handling of the Lin Biao incident in 1971.

Lin, defense minister and China's heir apparent, died in a plane crash after an abortive coup attempt. Although the role he played is still unclear, Hua is considered one of the few who know all the details of the affair.

Hua, who comes from Hunan, the same province as Chairman Mao Tse-tung, is a member of China's ruling Politburo.

He ranks 11th in the Communist hierarchy and is the sixth of 12 vice premiers in the State Council.

He also is said to be one of China's top agricultural experts, credited with conducting successful water conservation and irrigation projects in 1966 as head of the Shaoshan irrigation district command in Hunan province.

Hua's early background is unknown here.

From 1958 to 1967 he served as vice governor of Hunan province and as alternate secretary of the Communist Party's Hunan provincial committee.

According to information available in Tokyo, Hua was named a member of the Presidium of the party ninth national congress in 1969, and a member of the Central Committee. He was reelected to the party 10th Central Committee in 1973.

He was first secretary of the party's Hunan provincial committee in December 1970 and was frequently stationed in Peking, where he handled Hunan affairs from November 1971.

He became first political commissar of the Hunan military district and concurrently political commissar of the Canton military region in November 1972.

He has been a member of the Politburo since Aug. 30, 1973 and a deputy of the fourth National People's Congress and a member of the Congress Presidium since January 1975.

State doctors urged to form insurance firm

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The California Medical Association should form its own company to insure doctors against malpractice suits, the association's outgoing president said Saturday.

In his farewell address at the opening session of the CMA's policy-making House of Delegates, Dr. Carl Goetsch of Berkeley said government should be asked to intervene only when physicians are unable to solve their own problems.

"For this reason, I believe that we of the California Medical Association can help ourselves by establishing our own insurance company," he said.

Goetsch said the three liability insurance companies sponsored by California medical societies would be strengthened by a CMA-sponsored insurance company.

"Some parts of the problem can be solved only by a change in the litigious nature of our society," Goetsch said. "Some parts can be changed only by judicial reinterpretation of our present laws or by prudent legislative action."

"And there are some parts of the problem that we ourselves must solve."

The 300-member house distributed for study more than 200 resolutions. Committees studying those resolutions will make recommendations on them to the delegates Tuesday, and if approved they become part of CMA policy.

More than one-third of the resolutions deal with the malpractice issue, a CMA spokesman said.

Dr. Ralph M. Milliken of Los Angeles was scheduled to take over as president and address the delegates Tuesday.

Males need to be freed

By LINDA ZINK
Staff Writer

If you think men are the "stronger" sex or that they enjoy some kind of privileged status in American society, Herb Goldberg has news for you.

"The notion of masculine privilege is a fantasy," Goldberg proclaimed. "Men die younger...commit suicide three times more often than women (despite the fact that women attempt it four times more frequently)...are emotionally isolated from other men...and unduly dependent on women."

"For all their so-called 'privileges,' men experience very little joy in life. They are solitary warriors...out of touch with their own feelings...requiring less and less contact with anyone."

"The very things that are considered male in our culture are the things that lead to illness and early death...Success (society's traditional definition of masculinity) is largely an isolationist experience...and the most successful men are those who mask themselves so completely that their outer life has nothing to do with their inner feelings..."

Goldberg, a clinical psychologist and author of the recently-released "The Hazards of Being Male: Surviving the Myth of Masculine Privilege," threw these thoughts out during a day-long seminar sponsored by UCLA Extension.

In the end, he had no concrete suggestions as to what men should do to free themselves from what he calls the "male success trip." But he had plenty of arguments for why they should — and why at the same time they should be encouraging women to take responsibility for themselves and their lives, thus releasing men from the bind in which they find themselves.

"MAN'S PERCEPTION of earth mother — the passive, weak, submissive female — is nothing but a collusion between the sexes...it is role playing under intense social pressures...a situation that leads to macho, self-destructive behavior."

According to Goldberg, women today aren't changing, they're emerging; they're feeling less and less compelled to collude with men in the fantasy. Many men, however, fail to see this as a "freeing" experience and instead are threatened because it is taking away the justification for their driven, compulsive behavior.

"These men are what I call 'cardboard Goliaths,' in danger of toppling over if they're forced out of their compulsive routines," Goldberg said. And their justification for their behavior, he added, is always their wives and families.

"How many men say they do what they do for their families?" Goldberg questioned. "How many men have no one else they can relate to? How many men rely on a woman for their only outlet for what's real inside?"

If anyone doubted Goldberg's observations, a lunchtime exercise would quickly change his mind. The results of the exercise proved overwhelmingly that men had fewer intimates of the same sex than women did. Those men who could list a close male friend or friends seemed to feel they "gave" much more than they "got."

"As a man scales the ladder of success, he becomes increasingly more isolated and suffers from the fear of being 'found out' as an imposter."

"By middle age, most men have no close friends outside their families. I might point out that women experience this same sort of thing if they develop the male success style."

GOLDBERG BELIEVES it's no wonder that this type of man seems to fall apart if his wife or lover leaves him.

"Before a man is hooked into the relationship he seems autonomous, independent, even destructive and hurtful."

"Once he's hooked in, however, he develops an almost debilitating dependency on that woman. If his wife leaves he collapses as if his energy source had been taken away — and indeed in many ways it has. He feels as if he has nothing to live for — and given the way he has lived, that may be true. He's gone from total master to total slave. He becomes like a child."

Goldberg noted that the incidence of so-called "earth mothers" leaving their spouses is increasing and that even where the man is the one who leaves — "a less frequent occurrence anymore" — he almost always has another woman waiting for him in the wings.

- Flea market finds L/S-5
- In-sights L/S-7
- At wit's end L/S-11

"I have a notion," Goldberg said, "that the reason men die earlier than women is that somewhere in their subconscious they know they must because they're afraid to live alone."

GOLDBERG'S "NOTION" aside, the fact is that men do die earlier — an average of seven years earlier according to current statistics. Goldberg noted that after the age of 60, there are only 72 men alive for every 100 women. Yet there are 105 men born for every 100 women.

"Even as youngsters, boys are more inclined to have problems than girls," Goldberg said. "Such problems as schizophrenia, autism and stuttering are three and four times more likely to occur in boys than in girls."

Goldberg presented pages and pages of other proof of the precariousness of the male condition. For men, the incidence of both suicide and institutionalization for mental problems increases with age. Even sex is hazardous. "I was reading somewhere that a man over the age of 40 who is contemplating an extramarital affair should be sure to have a thorough medical checkup. What does this say about the male condition? Over the age of 40 he can't even have sex with abandon without first having a medical clearance."

Goldberg blames no one for what has developed after what he sees as years of "men and women misinterpreting the masculine experience." He is sympathetic to women and the women's movement and called upon men to battle backlash groups ("the Fascinating Womanhooders") who wish to push men and women back into anachronistic role playing. He is sympathetic to those men who can't move from where they are because society has conditioned fluidity out of them.

"But I'm tired of the self-hate and self-contemptuousness of the people who are leading the so-called 'men's liberation' movement," said Goldberg after reading excerpts from several of the current best-selling male liberation books. "No other group has found its liberation by denying what it is and by donning a sack cloth. If there is to be a male liberation it must be with self-love and self-growth, not with guilt and self-hate."

'Happy Fella' warms CLO

By PATRICIA de LUNA
Staff Writer

Michael Quinn seems indeed a "Most Happy Fella." That's the role he'll soon be playing for Long Beach Civic Light Opera, but from the manner of the man himself, that also seems the way he is.

Michael Quinn likes to joke. He says he always wanted to play Tony Esposito, an exuberant middle-aged Italian grape farmer from the Napa Valley who is "every inch a man," as the musical's leading character is described in the libretto.

"I figured if I waited around long enough I would be the right age and weight," he laughs.

Victoria Mallory, who plays Rosabella, the young waitress who captures Tony's heart in the restaurant and eventually goes up to his vineyard to marry him, has performed many leading soprano roles, including that of Maria in "Westside Story" during its first revival at Lincoln Center in New York.

"The part of Rosabella," she says, "is all those roles and more. I've always wanted to do Rosabella. Much happens to her. She changes."

"Most Happy Fella," a Frank Loesser musical based on Sidney Howard's "They Knew What They Wanted," is a rousing romantic comedy which requires all leading characters to sing full out. "A difficult score but one which moves beautifully," say the show's two leading stars. "It's demanding on everyone; everyone needs first-rate voices."

"The characters are nicely developed. They are interesting, deep people."

MICHAEL QUINN, a familiar face who has enjoyed and played many character roles, not only those requiring his deep baritone voice but those demanding his acting talent, says the very nature of theater is to dispel belief. And for that reason, this 20-year-old musical remains "very feasible, very believable," even today.

"It's part of the romantic nature of young girls," he says, "to exchange letters with a strange man; have pen-pals, as it were, and fall in love with a picture. It's an easy thing to accept."

The theme is very true to life, says Victoria Mallory. "Such a love story is not likely to happen in life as it does in the operetta, but it doesn't matter because of the way it is presented."

The story is basically that Tony falls in love with Rosabella in the restaurant where she is a waitress. He leaves her a love note on the back of his menu and his "amotist" (amethyst) tie pin instead of a tip.

"I cannot leave you money on the table," he writes in broken English. "You look to nice, and so I leave you my genuine amotist tie pin." Rosabella is intrigued and the two begin to correspond.

"She was-a to write to me one postcard. Then I was-a write. Then she was-a write. Then I was-a write. Then she was-a write. Then me. Then she. Then me. Then she — and now..."

Love turns to tragedy, however, when Tony deceives Rosabella by sending her a picture of his handsome foreman instead of himself. "Ah, Rosabella, what-a use? If I was-a send you my pitch — it's-a no make love. It's-a just make laugh." And he tears his own photo in half.

This was Tony's fatal flaw, says Quinn, which led to Rosabella's infidelity and which made her "a victim of the ultimate con." This is romantic comedy, he says, but it has all the meat of a drama.

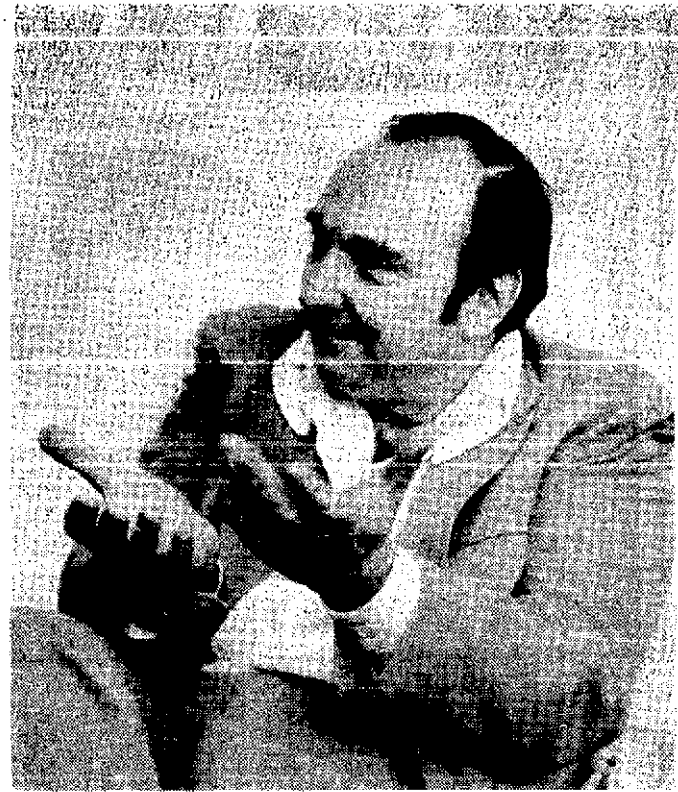

QUINN, WHO STUDIED at the New England Conservatory and was with the New York City Opera Company and the NBC TV Opera Company for several seasons, also played the judge in "Hello, Dolly." "I was amazed that show was such a success," he says. "It surprised me."

Then, "The scene with my song was cut while we were playing in Washington, maybe that's why I was surprised," he laughs.

His usual roles are the heavy or comic character parts. "I'm adaptable to the part," he adds, however. His first romantic part was as Phil in "Milk and Honey." "This is my second," he says.

Quinn played Jud in "Oklahoma!" in Las Vegas. "I gave it a sympathetic approach. I'm sympathetic. I have a positive view of life and people and it comes through in the parts I play. People are not all black or all white. I play my roles that way, otherwise the character is one-dimensional."

Q: When Jackie Gleason recently climbed into a Miami Beach ring and punched wrestling champ Harley Race for calling him a "fat bum," was it really for real? — Dennis Mosher, Miami Beach, Fla.

A: We thought so, but now Gleason tells us Harley is a member of the human race and it was really a ripoff. "I used to AVIATRIX Amelia Earhart — Hawaiian premonition proved true.

Claire Robinson, Birmingham, Ala.

A: Yes, she married; no, she didn't retire. She continues performing with the group but doubles as babysitter for her eight-month-old daughter, Turkessa Ferrer. Even wearing a backpack in which to tote the infant.

Q: Is it true that Buddy Hackett once lost his permit to carry a gun in Miami? If so, what's the story? — Mr. and Mrs. Max Ade, St. Louis.

A: A simple one. Buddy was gifted with a pearl-handled .38 after doing a benefit show for the Miami Beach Police and Firemen's Association. Appearing in person before the Dade County inspectors to qualify for a permit, the comedian (a cop buff, who's also expert with a pistol) jokingly shot out a lightbulb. The authorities didn't laugh. They took his gun away, and didn't issue a permit. He got both back when he left town, however.

Q: Vacationing in Honolulu, we were told the Hawaiians had a premonition that Amelia Earhart would be lost on her flight around the world in 1937. What's the story? — Ruth and Chuck Jacobson, Boynton Beach, Fla.

A: During the stopover in Hawaii by Miss Earhart and her navigator Fred Noonan, a plaque was dedicated to the intrepid woman flyer. When originally set in place, the stone bearing the plaque broke from the foundation and fell face downward, arousing an old Hawaiian superstition that she would never return to the islands.

Q: We saw Margaret Hamilton last night in a TV movie. And I said she played the Wicked Witch of the West in "The Wizard of Oz." Please give us the answer and put an end to the argument. — Mrs. M. Osborne, Denver, Colo.

A: Ms. Hamilton, a one-time kindergarten teacher who entered films via the Broadway stage, was the Wicked Witch in the 1939 Judy Garland classic. But she's become more readily recognized in recent years as "Cora the Coffee Lady" on TV commercials.

Cancer bout brings searing indictment of M.D.s

Most books by celebrities should only be read between Oxydol commercials. Cocktail party chatter without the benefit of alcohol.

That's because: (1) Most celebrities are interested only in themselves, a fact that poisons the stories of their lives with an air of self-indulgence that is about as relevant to mankind as wallpaper paste; (2) most show-biz autobiographies are not so much written as phoned in from a cabana at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Hildegard Knief is a noble, enlightening exception.

Her first book, "The Gift Horse," an international bestseller to this day, was about her childhood under Hitler, the ravages of war and how she got to America, where she eventually became the toast of Broadway in Cole Porter's "Silk Stockings." Her new book, "The Verdict," which has already been translated into 18 languages, goes off like a grenade in your hands. After 56 operations for cancer, she has written a blistering saga of survival without the slightest trace of self-pity.

She's no Joan of Arc and there's none of that sad, mawkish sentimentality that makes martyrs out of mortals. Yet these two books form one of the most moving and involving chronicles of life I have ever read, combining a richness of style (Knief knows so much about the new journalism she could teach Tom Wolfe and all the rest of us a few things) with the emotional development of a hypnotically structured novel. This gorgeous woman with bottle-green eyes that see through everything has lived through Hell and written about it clearly.

"She's the best thing that ever came out of Germany," says Stuart Schulberg, producer of NBC's "Today" show, who has known her since he was a G.I. in Berlin after the war.

"She's Mother Courage," says Marlene Dietrich,

the only other German who was ever in the same league.

BUT DIETRICH was a creation. Knief is a reality. She is the perfect wedding of intellect and emotion, incapable of a dishonest response or a phony ideal. She's like a tree. No matter how many times you chop away at its branches, it stands proud and tall. No wonder so many men have loved her, from Cole Porter to Henry Miller. She came to New York recently to talk about her books and her life, and everyone who met her fell in love again. She turned winter to spring.

She shook all the hands, submitted to all interviews, wore lavish fashions, posed for thousands of

"There is only one capitol of the world," she said, "and that is New York. I get very excited when I am here. But in the long run, I know New York eats you. Writing is a crocodile that eats up your time. It's an anaconda of the worst sort. A book takes two years out of my life. I can't do that in New York because I can't concentrate here. So I always go home. But America is always in my heart."

She has three completely different, successful professions. She is considered the greatest actress to emerge from the post-war German film industry. Author, singer and writer of more than 200 songs. A new book of poetry and a forthcoming novel. In Europe, she's one of the hottest recording stars alive. She doesn't have time to get sick, yet most of the money she's made has gone for doctor bills.

"I WROTE 'THE VERDICT'" because we spend billions to fly to the moon just to bring back a little bag of rocks, yet with the illnesses that descend upon us like the plague we act like primitive tribes in Africa doing a rain dance. If only half the money we spend on weapons in the world could be spent on research, we would be much better off.

"I also find it disgusting the way doctors treat patients. Physical illness does not make you an idiot. They have no personal feelings. A breast or a foot is examined like a pack of cigarettes. They are responsible for the lives of others, yet they go on forever and nobody checks them out to see what they are doing, whereas a pilot, who is also responsible for the lives of others, must undergo rigorous tests every six months.

"Now why do we accept every man in a white smock who looks at us like a ham sandwich just because he is scientific about it? I don't think medicine is a science, because you go to two doctors with the same illness and you get two different verdicts. Our faces are different, and so are our insides. I didn't write the book as a revenge to smash all doctors, but as a hymn to life that might help others."

"The Verdict" is now required reading in some medical schools and hospitals. Knief knows what she's writing about. Infantile paralysis in childhood followed by malnutrition during the war led to "a snowball that turned into an avalanche": hepatitis, colitis, gallstones, rheumatic fever, a ruptured appendix, a hysterectomy and a mastectomy, among other ills.

"I have also had the misfortune to fall into the hands of doctors who would like to have a new house in Ibiza and figured I'm the perfect patient to finance it, forgetting totally that I have to work very hard for every dime I earn. I didn't inherit any money, and I'm not independently wealthy. Then they operated on me whether I needed it or not. I have never found one doctor who said, 'I took out your appendix, it was perfectly in order and I made a mistake.'"

"A lot of things that had been in order have been put in disorder. For example, when my daughter Christina was born, I was happy as a cow and looked like a bus and everything was marvelous. Then she came early, and the way they handled it was so demented it started a whole series of complications from which I still have not recovered."

"The anesthetist was late so they let me lie there in agony, then performed an unnecessary female operation that now prevents me from having any more children. I didn't even know what was happening. When you are lying there in pain with the belly open, it's not the time to ask questions, and this happens to thousands of women."

SHE HAS SURVIVED the perils of Job, yet it has not made her cynical or apathetic. "I hate pity. Help helps, but not pity. I have been so close to death that now just growing old would be a luxury. I have learned the hard way to love life each day." She knocks on wood. "I have a clean bill of health now, so I live each minute at a time. I was trained and

Remember when...

The year was 1953. The aircraft straining against its brakes as the flight crew revved up four powerful piston engines on the runway at Los Angeles. It was a DC6B, latest in a long line of Douglas Commercial transports. The destination was Paris and the objective was to set a new world record by flying the 5,700 miles to France without an intermediate stop.

Carrying a crew of seven and a 104,080-pound payload at takeoff, the DC6B consumed most of the Memorial Day weekend by flying a Great Circle route over Canada and Greenland to Europe in 20 hours and 28 minutes. At takeoff it carried 6,755 gallons of fuel reduced in volume by refrigeration before being pumped into the wing tanks.

The DC6B was the second of three ordered by Transports Aeriens Intercontineaux, an international carrier now incorporated in UTA French Airlines. The airliner was capable of a top speed of 360 miles an hour and cruised at 315.

While the flight was planned as an official attempt to set a distance record for commercial aircraft, there was no delay in the scheduled delivery date of May 28 to wait for more favorable weather. Strong headwinds generated by a storm over Labrador slowed the flight, canceling gains from tailwinds up to that point.

Douglas chief pilot John Martin and two other company pilots, Larry Peyton and Paul Patton, were aboard with the four-man French crew. The flight far surpassed the previous distance record of 4,000 miles, set only four months earlier by a Scandinavian Airlines System DC6B over a near-polar route between New York and Stockholm.

SEVENTEEN YEARS and several generations of Douglas transports later, a giant jetliner bearing the insignia DC10 quietly tested its engines at the end of the long diagonal runway at Long Beach Airport. Each of its three whispering fanjets packed more propulsive power than all four of the DC6B propeller engines.

The new jumbo jet was poised for its maiden flight. Five weeks earlier it had been introduced publicly at rollout ceremonies by James S. McDonnell and Donald W. Douglas, chairman and honorary chairman of the Douglas Aircraft Co. parent corporation. U.S. Vice President Spiro T. Agnew joined the aviation industry leaders in signaling the first DC10 into view at the final assembly hangar on the west side of Long Beach Airport.

Now, on August 29, 1970, the same aircraft was ready for the supreme test. Midway along the two-mile runway, a group of newsmen and company officials waited expectantly. Photographers checked focus and exposure settings.

In the cockpit, DC10 project pilot Clifford L. Stout advanced the three engine throttle controls and 340,000 pounds of aircraft, fuel, ballast and test equipment began to roll. Co-pilot Harris C. Van Valkenburg called out speed readings as the jet raced toward the observers. Flight engineer John D. Chamberlain and test equipment engineer Shojun Yukawa monitored their instruments.

No exhaust smoke was visible when Stout executed the function of rotation and lifted the nose wheel of the DC10 4,950 feet down the runway, within inches of the predicted takeoff point. The initial shakedown flight of three hours and 26 minutes was a preview demonstration of today's routine DC10 performance on nonstop flights from Los Angeles to Europe in half the time of the 1953 DC6B record. — HERB SHANNON.

THE FORMULA

Mothproof your woolens

Now that it's nearly time to pack away woolens for the spring and summer months, you should be thinking about a good moth repellent. Those pesky critters go through a wardrobe leaving nothing but chewed-up possessions.

When the time comes to wear that favorite sweater (perhaps a Christmas present) it may be a see-through style because the moths found it a favorite, too. Here's a simple, inexpensive way to protect your woolens.

Cut cardboard strips about two inches by four inches and punch a hole near the center of the top edge. Now you'll need one pound of PARADICHLOROBENZENE (don't let this seven-syllable word scare you; ask for moth crystals at your hardware store and you'll have it). Put the Paradichlorobenzene in the top of a double boiler (the amount depends on how many cards you plan to coat) and turn on heat. When the material has melted dip the cards into it repeatedly, allowing cooling between each dip, until a coating of about one-fourth inch has built up on each side of the card. Note: PARADICHLOROBENZENE is moderately toxic and vapors are irritating to eyes. Melt in a well-ventilated area such as under a stove exhaust fan. Store excess material in airtight glass or plastic jar.

The cost of making your own moth repellent is seven cents an ounce. Compare to moth repellent cards available at retail stores. You'll be surprised at how much you save with so little effort.

Note: Material costs are based on the prices at retail outlets of national drug, grocery and hardware chains. These costs will vary, depending on the geographic area. If you wish to make up a larger quantity — and save even more — buy your materials at a chemical supply company. (Like any chemical product you use at home, you should store this one safely, label it — listing ingredients and noting any cautions — and keep it out of reach of children.)

There has never been a how-to book so practical and helpful as THE FORMULA BOOK. Hundreds of easy recipes put savings and fun into the making of your own personal and home care items. Over 200 pages of recipes, diagrams and instructions on ingredients and equipment, in a large paperback format, for only $5.95. Send to THE FORMULA BOOK, Independent Press Telegram, P. O. She has been in California for less than two years, coming West with her husband, actor Mark Lambert, who also was in the "Night Music," cast.

"Most Happy Fella," also starring Kelly Britt as Cleo, and Wayne Bryan as Herman, the second romantic leads in the operetta, will begin Feb. 20 and run for three consecutive weekends. Friday and Saturday showings will be at 8:30 p.m. with Sunday matinees at 2:30 p.m.

Songs include the popular, "Standin' on the Corner, Watchin' All the Girls Go By," "Big D," and "Somebody Somewhere." The show is rated "G," family entertainment and tickets are from $2.50 to $7.50. The Civic Light Opera office is at 518 E. Fourth St., Long Beach.

SOCIALLY SPEAKING

Love makes world go 'round

COUPLE OF international weddings make the news today.

Scene One opens in Honolulu last July when the yachts from the Trans Pacific Yacht Race arrived there.

Bob Ellis, son of Wilson High School Principal Bob and Molli Ellis, was one of the crew members.

While visiting the enchanted isle, he met and became enchanted with a Honolulu resident, Jill Dodge.

The yacht, Sorcery, owned and skippered by Jake Wood of Van Nuys, was entered in the Honolulu to Okinawa race sponsored by the Nippon Yacht Club.

Jill and Bob were fellow crew members and the sea and the Sorcery cast a magic spell over the two. The yacht won the race and Bob won a bride.

They were married in Okinawa with television and press coverage and a reception given by the Japanese Expo officials.

Scene Two takes place at the Long Beach Yacht Club recently where the Ellises feted the newlywed Ellises with a reception for 100 family and friends.

Jill's dad had offered to arrange to have flowers sent from the islands for the fete. He not only sent the flowers but hopped on a plane and surprised everyone by appearing at the reception.

Family members included young Bob's grandmother, Mary Ellis, an uncle, George Ellis and an aunt Dorothy Ricketts and her husband, Jim.

Among others were Vice Mayor Jim Wilson and Audrey, Don and Mary Kinsler of Pasadena, Margaret Feikley, Demy and Bea Anternore and Bob Edmunds with daughter, Lisa.

And from their own island homes, Santa Catalina, came Leo and Ethel Zager and Blackie and Judy Schatan.

DEBRA BLAZE became Mrs. Anthony Temple in an international ceremony in Stavanger, Norway.

Debra is the daughter of Henry Blaze and Vina Blaze both of Long Beach.

She met her English-born bridegroom while stationed in Norway as a flight attendant for TWA. He is a professional photographer in Stavanger.

When wedding plans began to form, mom Vina went to England to meet Anthony's family and to give her blessing to the intended marriage which was solemnized in the Bahai faith.

Participating in the vow exchange were members of the Bahai faith from Norway, Sweden, South Africa and the United States.

The couple had an extended honeymoon. They traveled to England, and Chicago, Ill., then to Long Beach where Debra is an alumna of Millikan High School. She also attended UC at Santa Barbara and its campus in Norway. They returned to make a first home in Stavanger after a stop in Hawaii.

Dick was fooled into believing that Kreste Wojdak was having a small housewarming for her new apartment in Marina Pacifica. His wife, Dee, with the help of Kreste, had surreptitiously made 800 canapés, along with sundry other goodies for the 100 guests who awaited Dick in the recreation room at MP.

Party was themed "Second Childhood" and featured magician Danny Rouzer from the Magic Castle.

Dee was assisted by Jane Willey who came with her son, Kenny, who served as official photographer and Jeri Giallanza, with husband, Chuck.

Among Harbor Dental Society members were Past President Dr. Marty and Mimi Geron. Hilda Donaldson stood in for her husband, Earl, also a past president.

The Lewises live on La Linda Drive in the Los Cerritos area and the neighbors have nicknamed themselves "The Drivers."

Drivers on hand to offer a birthday salute were former Councilman Ted Cruchley and his wife, Sue, Lincoln and Judy Ball, Glenn and Ann Burgeron, Marvin Cloyd, Jerry and Pat Flanagan, Fred and Connie Groff, Bea Holderness and Lloyd and Claudine Shidler.

If you see a car around town with the license plates 2BOOBY, that's Dick. For reason not explained, Dee calls him that, and that's what it said on the decorated cake.

Mirrors retain their popularity

By ELLEN ESHBACH
Chicago Tribune

Cleopatra used mirrors as a grooming aid and, according to the legend, had her slaves polish a piece of bronze daily so she could see her reflected beauty.

But the modern woman knows mirrors can serve a decorative function, too, and she's using everything from tiny squares to wall mirrors in her home.

For centuries the use of reflective glass in decoration was a luxury only the rich could afford. In Venice, where the blown-glass technique of making mirrors was discovered, aristocrats cherished their silver-foil-backed glasses as an item of rank.

In France, decorative mirrors became the vogue after huge glasses were installed in the Hall of Mirrors at the Palace of Versailles. The spacious and luxurious effect they gave did not go unnoticed, and soon mirrors were the mark of elegance in interiors.

MIRRORS were not important in the decoration of American homes until the late 1700s, when Chippendale, Adam, and Hepplewhite styles were handcrafted with scrolled tops, decorations of eagles and flowers, and painted scenes.

The pier glass was the proof of a fashionable decor during Victorian times. Such mirrors were set in front of the piers, or columns, between windows, while others appeared over mantels and were built into the dining room sideboard or buffet.

Today, the variety of colors, patterns, textures, and styles far exceeds that found in the past. Oriental, Queen Anne, contemporary, Federal, Art Deco, and Spanish mirror frames are among those being created from materials as diverse as wrought iron, leather, shells, aluminum, antiqued wood, upholstery, plastic, and ceramic tile.

SHAPES are more than rectangles and squares, too; ovals, free-forms, and geometrics abound, and many mirrors are three dimensional. Mirror glass itself can be smoked, antiqued, silk-screened, or veined, as well as clear.

Though wide availability has robbed mirror of its snob appeal, these new styles have found new functions.

In smaller homes mirrors make rooms look larger. A narrow hallway or small bathroom will seem more spacious if one or more walls feature large or full-wall mirrors. Beautiful mirrors also reflect the beauty of other furnishings, making a floral arrangement grow into a garden or revealing otherwise-hidden sides of sculptures, for example. And they can reflect light to brighten a room.

Because it can involve its surroundings, a mirror misses if it reflects a blank wall or a poor view, say, of the kitchen from the dining room or the bathroom from a bedroom. Also avoid hanging mirrors so low over seating pieces that they reflect the backs of people's heads or that other guests end up staring at themselves.

Flea Market Finds

Many value stoneware

Q. "When did cobalt blue designs become fashionable on American stoneware?" — VI, Brockton, Mass.

A. Country potters were busy supplying their rural clientele with utilitarian stoneware objects from the mid-1700s onward. Originally their pieces were unornamented, but by the early 1800s traces of cobalt blue began appearing. As the century progressed bolder designs were executed either by free-hand painting or with stenciled patterns. Birds, flowers, insects, animals, houses, leaves, figures and patriotic symbols led the parade of popular motifs. A maker's name, location or a date make a piece of stoneware doubly salable. The more pronounced the cobalt blue decoration, the higher the value. Stoneware value guide: Jar, cobalt blue bird decor, 3 gallon, $70.

Q. "Are movie star paperdolls worthless once they have been cut?" — Jean, Tulsa, Okla.

A. People with a passion for old paperdolls prefer those in uncut condition, but will rarely pass up a bargain in those which have already surrendered to the scissor set. This holds true of film star paperdolls and all other types. A complete 1937 book, "All Aboard for Shut Eye Town", featuring the Dionne Quintuplets sells for approximately $30. Few flea market fans can resist a single Alice Faye, Claudette Colbert, Betty Grable or Deanna Durbin doll with several costume changes particularly if the price hovers between $5 and $8. These nostalgic favorites are likely to escalate in value faster than you can say "lights, camera, action!"

Q. "Please assist us in appraising our collection of old tobacco tins and containers." — Dick & Ester, Hampton, Va.

A. Devotees of American advertising articles positively light up at the sight of an eye-catching tobacco tin. They appeared in a variety of fascinating sizes and shapes and in colorful designs following the introduction of the tin printing machine in the 1870s. Lunch boxes, pocket tins, store cannisters and other containers captivate collectors. Tobacco tin value guide: Dan Patch lunch box, $38; Dill's Best pocket tin, $8; Home Comfort pail, $26; Idle Hour Cut Plug pocket tin, $30; Summertime store cannister, $34; Union Leader Cut Plug lunch box, $15.

Q. "Was the Northwood Glass Company the sole producer of American custard glass?" — Mrs. F. M., Leesburg, Fla.

A. This coveted opaque glass, also known as Buttermilk glass, was introduced in the 1880s. Although the renowned Northwood factory made and marked many pieces with their familiar "N" within a diamond trademark, it was also marketed by other equally important American glass-houses. The Heisey Glass Company, Jefferson Glass Company and the Fenton Art Glass Company also produced that delicious collectible custard glass. Value guide: Argonaut Shell pattern water pitcher, $240.

Brico to conduct

An elite among a group of elites — internationally famous women conductors — will direct Long Beach Symphony's Feb. 22 concert at 8:30 p.m. in Long Beach City College Auditorium, Clark Avenue and Harvey Way.

She is Antonia Brico and her appearance in Long Beach is the result of an unusual situation.

The symphony's permanent conductor, Alberto Bolet, was to direct the scheduled First Chair Night concert. However, the Miami Beach Symphony has had financial problems, frequent staff changes and, at present, has no permanent conductor.

Hoping to solve some of its financial difficulties at least, the Miami Symphony asked Alberto Bolet to conduct in February with his famous brother, pianist Jorge Bolet, as guest artist. Long Beach Symphony Association agreed, providing a conductor of outstanding reputation could be found to take over the Long Beach concert.

This is one of those stories where all ends happily.

Long Beach Symphony manager John Hyer immediately phoned Antonia Brico at her home in Denver and it was she who answered — no tiresome red tape to untangle with managers or secretaries. The gracious Madame Brico at once agreed to the Long Beach date.

That left Alberto Bolet free to accept the Miami offer and the Bolet concerts there are completely sold out, hopefully to replenish the Miami Symphony's coffers enough to at least partially solve its problems.

THE AMAZING CAREER of Brico was revived following the 1973 Academy Award nominated documentary, "Antonia: A Portrait of the Woman," made by Brico's one-time piano student Judy Collins, now one of the most popular singers of her time. It was directed by Jill Godmilow and had tremendous impact.

Not likely. Not after the spunky life this 73-year-old musician has led. Born in the Netherlands, she was brought as a child to the United States by foster parents and graduated from UC Berkeley. But she was determined to become a conductor, an uncommon ambition for a woman at that time. She became the first American to graduate from the Master School of Conducting at the Berlin State Academy of Music at the University of Berlin. That was in 1929. She went on to study with Jean Sibelius, Albert Schweitzer, Wilhelm Furtwangler and Bruno Walter.

But it never was easy going. Men, she says philosophically, never resented a woman conductor. It was the women sponsors who preferred a handsome male conductor. This she notes without bitterness, but a bit wryly. She was years ahead of her time — a woman whose genius, whose musicianship was never in question. The problem was just that she was a woman.

Since the 1973 film, her career has rebounded. Among her 1975 engagements were those with the Oakland Symphony at Berkeley, the Brico Symphony in Denver and the Colorado Celebration of the Arts with the Brico Symphony in Denver, Hollywood Bowl, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Mostly Mozart Festival at Lincoln Center, the National Symphony Orchestra at Kennedy Center and the Denver Symphony.

If you don't have a ticket to the Feb. 22 concert, hurry! It's certain to be a major event. Call the symphony office, 121 Linden Ave.

Renoir art to hang at LBSU

By ELISE EMERY
Arts Editor

For the first time, the public may see the most comprehensive private collection of prints by Auguste Renoir when the exhibit opens in the Art Galleries of Long Beach State University Tuesday, Feb. 17. It will hang through March 14.

There are more than 50 prints in this collection of Dr. Joseph G. Stella, all of them documented by the recent publication "The Graphic Work of Renoir" which the collector wrote. Catalogue notes are by Robert Allen of the New York Cultural Center which has prepared the prints for travel throughout the United States. The show's only West Coast exhibit will be this one in Long Beach.

After the 7 p.m. opening Feb. 17, Allen will speak on "Renoir and the French Impressionist Printmakers" at 8 p.m. in the LBSU Studio Theater. The public is invited to both the opening and lecture without charge.

Gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and from 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays. Week-day parking is available to the public for 60 cents on the lot south of Seventh Street. All LBSU lots are open to the public without charge on Sundays.

RARE INDIAN TEMPLE hangings from the Rajasthan region are on view for the first time in Los Angeles at Occidental Center, 1150 S. Olive St. They are part of a three-year traveling exhibition organized by the American Federation of Arts and may be seen through March 11.

The 10 hangings are from the private collection of Karl Mann of New York. A definitive catalogue, "Rajasthani Temple Hangings of the Krishna Cult" has been written about this collection by Robert Skelton, keeper of the Indian Section of the Victoria and Albert Museum in London.

Executed during the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries in Rajasthan, northwestern India, the hangings are made of cloth painted with vivid colors. They celebrate the deity Krishna, subject of Hindu sect worship. The cult from which the hangings in this exhibition come, known as the Vallabha-charis, worships Krishna in private temples designed like long, rambling palaces with many courtyards and shrines.

The exhibition is free and open to the public from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. seven days a week.

THE PAGEANTRY and magnificence of 18th century France is shown in "18th Century France: the Height of Fashion" at the J. Paul Getty Museum, 17985 Pacific Coast Highway, Malibu. Nine elaborate French costumes, on loan from Los Angeles County Museum of Art, mirror the exquisite furniture and decorative arts collection at the Getty Museum.

Made of velvet, silk, satin, lace, and adorned with embroidery and fine detailing, the costumes add a new dimension to the Getty's collection of French decorative arts.

"When we see the incredible clothing worn by the nobility from the French court, the elaborate and ornate furniture becomes more comprehensible. Together, the clothing and furniture create a feeling for the splendor of 18th century France," commented Gillian Wilson, curator of decorative arts.

The four men's costumes and five women's gowns date from 1735 to 1810. There is no admission charge but advance reservations are suggested to guarantee parking and admission. Reservations may be requested by writing or telephoning the museum which is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays. The display will continue through April 20.

LONG BEACH CITY COLLEGE has a new director for its art gallery on the Liberal Arts Campus, 4901 E. Carson St. He is Michael Daniel who says that he plans to use his contacts as a professional artist and art educator to draw major exhibits.

"Colleges are in the unique position of being educative to the entire student body and the community as well as to art students. For that reason, I feel it is important to exhibit a wide variety of art forms from many periods. Our gallery will present contemporary art from the community and from around the world as well as historical and ethnic art."

Daniel, 29, comes to LBCC after three-and-a-half years as gallery director and studio arts instructor at Citrus College in Azusa. He has taught studio arts classes at Cerritos and Rio Hondo Colleges, Long Beach State University and LBCC, where he will resume teaching next fall in addition to his gallery duties. A Seal Beach resident, Daniel has a working studio in Long Beach.

THIRTEEN subjects will be offered in art classes for high school students and adults at Long Beach Museum of Art, 2300 E. Ocean Blvd. Both day and evening classes are scheduled; tuition ranges from $25 to $40 for non-members and from $22 to $36 for museum members. A sample of topics includes mixed media, doll construction, drawing, bronze casting and stained glass. For a complete listing and details, consult the museum.

Registration for classes which will begin the week of Feb. 22, may be made by mail, or in person at the first class meeting. Forms are available at the museum and most Long Beach Public Libraries.

IN-SIGHTS

How hard it is to ask for help

The voice on the phone was hesitant, plaintive. "Walt, I've never done anything like this before. And I'm not sure what to do. I just know that I can't do it more by myself. Can you help?"

This was an old friend, a proud man who had pulled himself up by his bootstraps and made a success in business. His life was falling apart. He was angry, discouraged, unable to sleep; he couldn't sort out his thoughts and feelings. Most troubling of all: he hated to admit that he couldn't solve the problems by himself.

He had been suffering for some time before he called me. But he just hadn't been able to ask anyone for help. During his childhood, he learned you couldn't really count on others to look after you. If you did, you were weak and vulnerable. So he had to do it by himself. Now, when his life was becoming a shambles and his wife had filed for divorce, he called for help.

When things are going well, you may not think of having to ask for help. But if you are working on an important project and something goes wrong, what does it take for you to ask for assistance? If you are digging a well and the ground gives way beneath you, how long do you wait before crying for help? If you're having chills and a fever, how long do you suffer before you call the doctor?

MOST PEOPLE have a strong drive to be independent; to need help from someone else may seem galling and demeaning. Not so for many of the pioneers. Despite their drive for self-reliance, they realized that survival in the wilderness or on the plains was chancy and often required mutual support. People joined together to help those who were overwhelmed. Many rural citizens still respect this principle. Yet there is today a prevailing attitude that one should suffer in silence. There is a fear of ridicule, for indeed people who require welfare support or who complain too much are often put down.

I know some people whose reluctance to ask for help includes going to see a doctor, even when they are quite ill. Most people, when physically ill, are able to admit their limits without feeling demeaned.

But when the problems are mental or emotional, it's different. Generally, the view is that we should be able to manage our mental and emotional problems by ourselves, even when you feel overwhelmed by anxiety or discouragement or puzzlement. How tragic that view can be.

Pride is one reason people may not seek help. But there are other reasons — a loss of self-esteem or the wish to avoid a sense of being beholden or obligated.

Many complicated feelings can be involved — superiority and inferiority, power and impotence, control and authority, punishment and guilt.

Personal integrity is another part of the problem. One young man shared with me the feeling that if he even discussed how to solve his problems with someone else, he wouldn't be solving the problem. Rather, someone else would be making the decision, not he.

IT IS A COMMON fallacy that the doctor cures illness, or the therapist solves problems. In reality, the doctor only helps you cure yourself; his ministrations and medication simply help the body to cure itself. And much psychotherapy is directed to help the patient have a broader perspective so he can more effectively solve his own problems.

We place great emphasis on teaching children to give and share with others. We may fail in teaching them to receive equally well, to be able to ask for and gratefully accept help when it is needed, without feeling demeaned or destroyed.

The survival of civilization is not a one-man or one-woman operation; it is a cooperative effort. We require assistance when we are born, and it takes others to bury us when we are dead. In between, we should try to avoid being trapped into thinking that we must go it alone all the time. Asking for help may be extremely hard, but yet the best course of action for all concerned.

Dancer on civic show

The Monna High Dance Studio will present dances of the South Sea Islands during Monday's community program in Veterans Memorial Building, Broadway at Cedar Avenue.

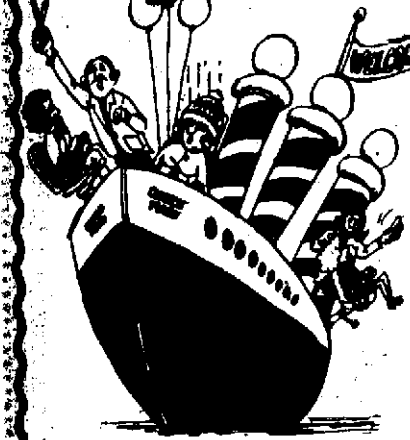

Community singing opens the program at 6 p.m., followed by the stage show. The admission free event is sponsored by the Senior Citizens Unit of the Long Beach Recreation Department.

Mythinformation on kids abounds

EIGHT WIDELY held beliefs about differences between the sexes are nothing but myths.

This is revealed in a Stanford University Press book, "The Psychology of Sex Differences," by Prof. Eleanor Maccoby and research associate Carol Nagy Jacklin of Stanford University.

Here are some of the findings based on a review of more than 1,400 studies:

Myth No. 1: Girls are more social than boys.

Facts: The two sexes are equally interested in such social stimuli as human faces and voices. Boys congregate in larger groups. Girls associate in pairs or small groups of children their own age.

Myth No. 2: Girls are more suggestible than boys.

Facts: No differences.

Myth No. 3: Girls have lower self-esteem than boys.

Facts: Boys and girls are very similar in overall self-satisfaction and self-confidence throughout childhood and adolescence.

Myth No. 4: Girls lack motivation to achieve.

Facts: When researchers observe behavior that indicates a motive to achieve, they find no sex differences or find girls to be superior.

Myth No. 5: Girls are better at rote learning and simple repetitive tasks. Boys are better at high-level tasks that require them to inhibit previously learned responses.

Facts: Neither sex is more susceptible to simple conditioning. Neither sex excels in rote learning tasks, such as learning to associate one word with another. Boys and girls are equally proficient at tasks that call on them to inhibit various responses.

Myth No. 6: Boys are more analytic than girls.

Facts: The sexes do not differ on tests that measure one's ability to analyze.

Myth No. 7: Girls are more affected by heredity, boys by environment.

Facts: Male identical twins are intellectually more alike than female identical twins, but the two sexes resemble their parents to the same degree. If learning is the primary means by which the environment affects us, then the two sexes are equivalent in this regard.

Myth No. 8: Girls are auditory, boys visual.

Facts: Male and female infants do not seem to respond differently to sounds. At most ages, boys and girls are equally adept at discriminating speech sounds. The sexes also seem to

It is available at drug counters without prescription.

The problem of lice is growing. There were some three million cases in the United States, according to a recent report to the American Medical Association.

Although complete control of lice is normally achieved with the use of one per cent gamma benzene hexachloride (Kwell), reinfection often occurs unless the sources of contamination are eliminated.

Kwell-Spray was developed for this purpose.

The manufacturer recommends spraying clothing and underclothing with Kwell-Spray before laundering or dry cleaning. It's also suggested that mattresses and upholstered furniture be sprayed and allowed to dry thoroughly before they are used.

The product is not indicated for use on skin or hair of humans or animals. Related products are available for that purpose.

SEAT BELT USE remains low, researchers find.

In a study in one major metropolitan area, it was found that motorists were unprotected by lap or shoulder belts in almost two-thirds of the 1975 model cars.

Installation of buzzer-light reminder systems and starter-interlock systems have had little effect on belt use. be alike in ability to discriminate (visually).

On the other hand, research shows that four sex differences are fairly well established. They are:

Difference No. 1: Males are more aggressive than females.

A sex difference in aggression has been observed in all cultures. Boys are more aggressive physically and verbally.

Difference No. 2: Girls have greater verbal ability than boys.

The sexes are similar in their verbal abilities from preschool to early adolescence. But at about 11, they begin to diverge. Female superiority increases through high school and possibly beyond.

Difference No. 3: Boys excel in visual-spatial ability.

This ability involves the visual perception of figures or other objects in space and how they are related to each other. Male superiority appears fairly consistent in adolescence, increasing through the high school years.

Difference No. 4: Boys excel in mathematical ability.

At about age 12 or 13, boys' mathematical skills increase faster than girls.

The workshop

Run your hand over an old handcrafted piece of American furniture. The warmth of the wood and the timeless styling are irresistible. No one with a sense of history can fail to appreciate the simple, honest craftsmanship of our early American furniture makers. There is certainly great beauty and durability in these old wood pieces... and always function.

One of the most popular of these old treasures is the dry sink. Originally these held water for washing dishes, but today's version can be adapted to countless uses. For the stereo buff, it's an excellent place to house speakers and components. It may also be used for storing linens, silver and things of that kind. If you need a liquor cabinet, here's a dandy. Many folks install a copper tray in the top area and use it for a planter. The shelves in the bottom may be adjusted to accommodate many different size items.

Here's a project that any amateur can undertake with our easy-to-follow pattern. A list of required materials (you'll probably use pine plywood) is included along with easy-to-understand directions and illustrations. The cost, when you build it yourself, is only a fraction of what it would be if you were to purchase it.

To obtain the full-size pattern No. 307 for this Dry Sink, send $1.50 (includes first class postage and handling). Mail your check, cash or money order to: Steve Ellingson, Long Beach Independent Press Telegram Pattern Dept., P.O. Box 2383, Van Nuys, Ca. 91409.

DEAR ABBY

Wife on bottom of priority list

DEAR ABBY: My husband is being used by his family, only he can't see it.

He works six days a week, and I like to plan something for us to do together on his day off.

Well, three weeks ago, his mother called on his

of wood, so my husband, the fool, spent his whole day off helping his brother.

I finally got mad and told him that he was putting his family before me, and he said, "Well, I've known them for 21 years, and I've known you only a had always thought was married asked me for a date. I turned him down, saying I do not date married men.

He then told me that he was not really "married" because he is a Catholic and he was married by a justice of the peace, so in the eyes of the Church he is single.

Is that right?

Please let me know because it's against my principles to go out with married men. Thank you. —PLAYING IT SAFE

DEAR PLAYING: Unless this man obtained a legal divorce, in the eyes of the LAW he is married.

DEAR ABBY: Clyde and I have been dating for eight months. We love each other very much and have talked about getting married.

We eat out on weekends and take turns paying for the meal. (We both have good jobs.) Here's the problem:

I am a very slow eater, and Clyde eats fast. While I'm eating my first course, Clyde eats his, plus his salad, and then he eats my salad, too.

When the main courses come, he devours his in no time, and then reaches over and starts in on mine. Before I've had three bites, Clyde has eaten everything on my plate!

I don't order dessert anymore because Clyde gobbles his up and mine, too.

What kind of husband do you think he'd make? His hogishness is not only disgusting and embarrassing, it leaves me... —HUNGRY

DEAR HUNGRY: Clyde's hogishness isn't your only problem. An appalling lack of communication between two people who "love each other" is just as serious. What's wrong with telling Clyde how you feel about his eating habits? Do that, and then you'll know what kind of husband he'd make.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box 69700, Los Angeles, Ca. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

DAR in Bicentennial salute

A reception Saturday at 1:30 p.m. in the Bixby Hill home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kussman, will honor Mrs. Frank R. Matlach, California state Bicentennial chairman for Daughters of the American Revolution and a member of the national society steering committee.

Hosting the event will be the chapters comprising District 13 of DAR, headed by Bonnie Miller, district director.

Patriotic music will be provided by pianist Connie Lu Berg and soloist Betty Ramsell. Miss Liberty will greet guests at the door. A recording of the carillon in the bell tower at Valley Forge also will be played.

Patrick and Mary Hollis Freeman of Huntington Beach, representing the Children of the American Revolution, will give all in attendance a copy of "The Freedom Collection."

Among those welcoming guests will be Mrs. Kussman, Mrs. Leroy Conrad Kaump of Fullerton, past vice president general, and Mrs. William Reische of Los Alamitos, national vice chairman of the Western Region.

Reservations may be made with Mrs. G.C. Berg in Long Beach.

Style show aids hospital

A 200-year vintage fashion collection compiled by the Thrift Shop League of California Hospital Medical Center will debut for public inspection Wednesday during Founders' Day luncheon of Torrance Memorial Hospital Auxiliary.

The event is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. in Sam's Velvet Turtle Restaurant, Torrance.

Except for a reproduction of a Martha Washington dress and one other costume, every gown depicting an era in the country's history, plus accessories, is an original donated from private collections, according to Mrs. Evelyn Bigsby, chairwoman of the vintage committee.

Authentic wedding dresses date back to 1845. The collection includes gowns from the gay 90s, lavishly beaded dresses from the Roaring 20s, chiton "barebacks" of the 30s, padded shoulders from the 40s.

CHARLES CUTSHAW
Flaming duck fit for the gods

QUITE OFTEN, I HAVE the highest praise in my columns for award-winning continental-American restaurants in Orange County and Los Angeles. They are superb establishments which deserve the honors they receive.

I am miffed, however, because Long Beach has a restaurant of award-winning caliber which doesn't receive any awards. It is Francois Manhattan, 1909 E. Fourth St., near Cherry Avenue. One of its continental creations is whole flaming duck for two persons, prepared on a cart at the guests' table. It is a dish fit for the gods. The sauce, made with liqueurs, herbs and love, is absolutely scrumptious — and the duck itself melts in your mouth.

Francois Manhattan hasn't received any awards for that wondrous creation, because it's an off-the-beaten-track restaurant. The Los Angeles restaurant writers have never visited it; thus it has never been nominated for an award. Prestigious dining and winning societies in the L.A. and Orange County areas haven't heard of the Manhattan either. Such societies often make recommendations which help restaurants receive recognition from regional or national organizations that make annual awards.

The Manhattan, which opened in the 1940s, is in one of Long Beach's older neighborhoods. It doesn't have a flashy modern decor. It's very good-looking, however, with designs that are American with old-world touches. Decade after decade, it has quietly built a reputation for excellence. It is well-known to Long Beach residents who appreciate fine dining and fine waiter and waitress service. It is also well-known to residents in many nearby cities. They love to drive to Long Beach to enjoy that flaming duck or perhaps the Manhattan's epicurean chateaubriand bouquette for two persons or the grenadine of beef for two persons. Those are extravaganzas which cost $17.95 — or more — for two persons. But the Manhattan also has superlative, multiple course table d'hote dinners which start at $5.

The Manhattan's talented, versatile executive chef is Charles Cutshaw, an artist in the creation of gourmet sauces. The general manager is Pat Wise, a charming woman, liked by everyone. The maitre d' is Joe Shavetz, who's been there two decades and has friends who are city councilmen and school leaders as well as ordinary folk.

At luncheon, Tuesdays through Fridays, the Manhattan is unusually popular because it offers so many different hot and cold creations, ranging from simple but delicious sandwiches to more glamorous fare, such as baked oysters en shell, steamed clams or cracked crab or perhaps crab en crepes or the minute steak with bordelaise sauce. The Manhattan is closed Mondays.

SPEAKING OF off-the-beaten-track restaurants, here's a contradiction for you. One of Long Beach's most popular dining rooms and entertainment lounges is adjacent to the San Diego Freeway. It's seen by thousands of motorists daily. But most of them don't realize it's there.

It's the Mayan Room restaurant atop the Long Beach Holiday Inn. It's a dozen stories in the sky, so high above the beaten track it isn't easily apparent to all those drivers as they whiz by.

The inn's Mayan Room is also well-known to numerous Long Beach residents who drop in regularly for dinner, cocktails and entertainment. They are lavish in their praise of the restaurant's new decor, which has a Mayan Indian theme. The colors are warm, cheerful and very bright, combining hot pinks, hot oranges, reds and blue. There are also replicas of Mayan art culture, such as stone faces and calendars.

Dinner is served Sundays from noon on. The Sunday specials range from family-style fried chicken, $3.50, to baked ham, $4.25; roast sirloin of beef, $3.95, and juicy, tender roast prime rib of beef, $8.50. Innkeeper John Dawson, who's from Montreal, and restaurant manager Ward Trobaugh, who's from Virginia, also offer entrees on their regular dinner menu which tie in with the Mayan theme. Among them are brochette of beef Picado, $5.50; seafood brochette Nescobar, $5.50, and broiled beef Azteca with an exotic, pungent sauce, $6.25.

New entrees on the regular menu, served every night, include breast of chicken Kiev, $5.50, an unusual dish prepared with butter; smoked pork chops, $5.50, and choice baby beef liver, $5.25. All come with crisp green salad, potatoes, vegetable of the day and basket of warm, fresh bread.

Many choose corps careers

Knight News Service

NEW YORK — Army nurses have come a long way since the Army Nurse Corps was first organized 75 years ago this month.

In its early days, during the civil war, coordinator Dorothea Lynde Dix is said to have ruled that all volunteers must be older than 30 and as homely as possible.

That was to combat the most dangerous enemy of professional nursing — marriage.

But the qualifications have changed radically. For one thing, you don't have to be female. The Army began to accept male nurses in 1955, and today it's estimated that 27 per cent of the 3,700 nurses in the corps are male. You also can be married, have children and still practice nursing in the Army.

According to Capt. Mary B. Kelly, Army Nurse Counselor and recruiter in Newark, N.J., men and women get the same assignments and the same pay.

Capt. Kelly points out, high salaries, coupled with other benefits, like early retirement at half pay and education opportunities has led to a higher retention rate.

"It used to be a lot of nurses left after they completed their two-year commission. But ever since Vietnam, the more attractive benefits have stimulated Army nurses to make a career of the corps. They also realize that many civilian hospitals aren't hiring right now, and we are," said Capt. Kelly.

computerized from childhood to fight for life. Sometimes, with the bombs falling and my head bleeding and my jaw broken, I would stay alive just by concentrating on a new case of dysentery. At the blackest moments, when I've been close to death, there's too much anger in me to give up. The loss of a breast or a hip is nothing compared to the beauty of living."

She never set out to write a book about an actress. When she left "Silk Stockings" and her Hollywood film career behind, she decided to tell what it was like growing up under a dictatorship. "You had no chance as a child in Nazi Germany to work in the resistance or emigrate or anything, because you didn't even know what was going on around you. Then, by the time it is over, you are held responsible. Only then do you find out what really happened. I felt it was time somebody told the truth."

"The former Nazis are becoming biologically extinct, and the young generation in Germany doesn't even know what Hitler looked like. So I wrote 'The Gift Horse' to explain why I innocently fell in love with a Nazi and ended up in a Russian prison camp. And I was ready to accept the consequences."

"Only through the profession of acting was I catapulted into Hollywood, where I thought the war was over and everybody loved everybody. I found out nobody loves anybody, and the resentment against the Germans was so tremendous it made me absolutely speechless. I was put on ice and dragged out every time they needed a glamorous spy in a Darryl F. Zanuck movie. I went from a dictatorship to a dictatorship opera."

No book has ever dissected Hollywood with the insight, brilliance or biting wit of "The Gift Horse." She prunes away the clutter the way the best gardeners select the ripest flowers for the vase. Yet she has an amazing command of sophisticated English.

"Nothing is harder than knowing what to leave in and what to leave out. Most people writing autobiographies just write what happened to them in their lives. That does not make a good book. I always try to write in the style of the girl I was at the time. As I matured, so did my vocabulary. I write in German, and my husband, David Palastanga, translates it into English. I write two hours a day and then file it away and forget it. I have the illusion nobody will ever read what I am writing. Otherwise, I would not be able to write my own name."

SHE HATES HOLLYWOOD movies about Nazis, she says, because "they are always shown as blubbery idiots, but they were there for 12 years and they were not clowns, and they brought the greatest horror the world has ever known and changed all our lives for generations to come, and I get absolutely furious when I see them treated like Keystone Kops because they were much too dangerous." She has just completed her first film in nine years about the German resistance.

"I said I'd never make another film. At a certain age you must face the fact that films are an idiotic profession and you can't be held responsible for the work of others. A film is made by the author, the producer, the director, the camera and the cutter. But in the end, it's the actor who gets the blame. So I got fed up."

"Now I break my 'never again' rule because this is the most honest, intelligent script I've read in years. I play a poor woman whose son was shot in the first days of the war. She wrote postcards saying, 'Hitler killed my son!' and 'We are following the Fuhrer like a herd of sheep to the slaughterhouse!' and planted them all over Berlin. The Gestapo went insane. She succeeded to baffle them for a year before they caught her. It's called 'Everyone Dies Alone,' and it's a true story — the first indication in years that the German film industry might be surfacing again."

She has "a criminal memory" for all that has happened to her. Also a deep, throaty laugh that moves sexily from her porcelain neck downward until it hugs her toes. She's so shrewd that she cuts through facades like a laser. She doesn't suffer fools easily, yet she's not tough. "I'm a goulash of emotions. I have a great capacity for friendship and laughter. But I'm terrified of stupidity because it's the stupid ones who are the most dangerous. My private life is chaos, but my work is very disciplined. I am totally unable to handle money. My finances are always in a muddle."

"I could probably have been a big American film star after 'Silk Stockings,' but I detest playing the silly games that go on in Hollywood. If you go to this party, maybe you'll get the part. I hate the bickering with agents and the asininity of being a star."

"Yet I don't regret the decisions I've made. I don't censor my life. The things we do are there, they change us and it's these changes which make us what we are in the end, good or bad. I have paid a high price for my survival, but survival breeds optimism. Right now, I am more optimistic than ever. For years I went around being somebody else. They changed my name to Hildegard Neff. I was an onlooker in the wrong vicinity. Now I am my real self again — Hildegard Knef, pronounced with a K. I know who I am, and the climate looks good."

It's not just the survival that makes her remarkable. It's the way she survived and what it can teach us about ourselves that makes her books and performances such rewarding experiences. We should be grateful that she cared. It's a better world when Knef is in it.

Aces on bridge

Dear Mr. Korn: What is meant by bad points or good points? We missed a slam and my partner alibied that her points were bad ones.

Bad News Sacramento

Answer: Good and bad points refer to the type of high cards held as compared to what has been promised by prior bidding. For example, if partner were interested in slam after your opening one no trump, you would much prefer to cooperate if your points were in aces and kings rather than queens and jacks. A bad 16 points also may refer to the lack of distribution or intermediate card values.

Listen to this one from the ACBL Bulletin: "Did you hear about the player who, holding 29 high card points, got only to six no trump after getting a positive response from partner? His reason: it was a bad 29 points."

Dear Mr. Korn:

We had this unusual bidding and everyone is wondering who is right. Some say West's second double is for penalties. Others say it's for takeout. Can you clarify?

South	West	North	East
1♥	DBL	Redbl	Pass
Pass	1♠	Pass	Pass
2♥	DBL

Disaster Area, New Orleans

Answer: Theoretically this is a penalty double. However, I would interpret the double as a desire to compete further since it is very unlikely that West thinks he can beat two hearts (if he can, he probably should pass and be satisfied with a plus).

However, as you obviously have experienced, I would be ever careful in doubles of this sort without a definite agreement beforehand. Your letter adds an exclamation point to my caution sign.

Dear Mr. Korn: The dinner bell breaks up the women's day rubber. How is the score computed?

Ding Dong, Newark

Answer: If only one game is completed, the winners of that game get 300 points. If only one side has a part score in a game not completed, that side gets 50 points. The trick and premium points of each side are added and the side with the greater number wins the difference in totals.

Dear Mr. Korn: Does the double of an opening three bid force partner to bid?

Doubled Game, Dayton

Answer: The double is generally played as a takeout double. Responder should bid unless he thinks defending the doubled contract is best for his side. With very good trumps and no game visions he can convert the double and pass for penalties.

The economy in brief(s)

Knight News Service

America's men and women are facing an underwear-price crisis that's no laughing matter, says a Philadelphia clothing merchant who keeps an eye on such things.

For the first time since the Depression, Sam Bortnick of Bortnick's Department Store, is opening packages of men's underwear and selling single pairs of Fruit of the Loom shorts.

And Sam thinks the price of underwear is a better barometer of the times than all the economic theories in the world.

Dinner-dance planned by police wives

Valentine's dinner-dance sponsored by the Los Alamitos Police Wives Association is planned Saturday at the Golden Sails Inn. Tickets are $11 per person and may be obtained from the Police Department, 3201 Katella Ave., Los Alamitos. Grand prize will be a trip for two to Las Vegas.

Proceeds from the event will support community activities and services.

Three years ago, Sam reports, he could sell a package of three pairs of men's shorts for $2.05. Then last year they went to $3.89, and he's just been notified of a wholesale price increase that means he'll have to sell three pairs for $4.59.

And they're pretty flimsy shorts, he adds.

Sam recently alerted the nation's women to a "Snuggles crisis" (Snuggles, for uninitiated, are knee-length cotton-knit garments that some women have been wearing for years. When snuggles went from $1 to $2.50 or more, Sam decided he wouldn't even stock them. "Women are saying, 'This is outrageous,' and I don't blame them. I'd rather not even stock the things."

SAM, WHO looks upon himself as a kind of early-warning system on the price of unmentionables, says: "How can you ask a man for $1.60 or so for a pair of shorts so flimsy that a gust of wind would make a hole in them?"

"Like I keep saying,

Women are asking...

They say anything goes in fashion. What is 'with-it' for blouses and shirts?

By REBA & BONNIE CHURCHILL

Eye-catching is the word for shirts, sweaters and toppers that dazzle the eyes with multi-patterns and colors! Today, the order of fashion is mix-match-then-mix-again.

Probably grandma would shudder if you suggested wearing strips, circles, silks, knits, ribbons and bows — all in one topper set. But, as Kathy Crain illustrates, it can be done — and nicely, too. The full-sleeved, tailored blouse is a riot of compass circles, accented with striped collar and cuffs. A soft knit pull-over supplies the all girl touch with ribbons threaded diagonally across the torso and bows lining the hi-length hem.

If you'd prefer something more "clotheshorse cowboy," check the western style shirt-jackets that are riding herd on fashion. They draw attention, too, since they are in sunset orange, barbecue red and smokehouse purple.

Don't let the names of the colors fool you — they just mean they are bright-bright colors. They are "tamed" with contrasting stitching around collar and cuffs, across the shoulders, down the torso and accenting the snap-button front and hemline.

Naturally, the stylish buckaroo has zipper pockets that slash on a slant just below the waist. So, when you're shopping for shirts, remember, today bold and bright are right.

Grows more beautiful with each passing year

According to her height and weight on the insurance charts, she should be a guard for the Lakers. She has iron-starved blood, one shoulder is lower than the other, and she bites her fingernails. She is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. She should be. She's worked on that body and face for more than 60 years. The process for that kind of beauty can't be rushed. The wrinkles in the face have been earned...one at a time. The stubborn one around the lips that has deepened with every "No!" The thin ones on the forehead that mysteriously appeared when the first child was born. The eyes are protected by glass now, but you can still see the perma-crinkles around them. Young eyes are darting and fleeting. These are mature eyes that reflect a lifetime. Eyes that have glistened with pride, filled with tears of sorrow, snapped in anger.

and burned from loss of sleep. They are now direct and penetrating and look at you when you speak. THE BULGES are classics. They developed slowly from babies too sleepy to walk who had to be carried home from Grandma's, grocery bags lugged from the car, ashes carried out of the basement while her husband was at war. Now, they are fed by a minimum of activity, a full refrigerator, and TV bends.

The extra chin is custom-grown and takes years to perfect. Sometimes you can only see it from the side but it's there. Pampered women don't have an extra chin. They cream them away or pat the muscles until they become firm. But this chin has always been there, supporting a nodding head that slept in a chair all night...bent over knitting...praying.

The legs are still shapely, but the step is slower. They ran too often for the bus, stood a little too long when she "clerked" in the department store, got beat up while teaching her daughter how to ride a two-wheeler. They're purple at the back of the knees.

THE HANDS? They're small and veined and have been dunked, dipped, shook, patted, wrung, caught in doors, splintered, dyed, bitten and blistered, but you can't help but be impressed when you see the ring finger that has shrunk from years of wearing the same wedding ring. It takes time — and much more — to diminish a finger.

I looked at mother long and hard the other day and said, "Mom, I have never seen you so beautiful." "I work at it," she snapped.

CHEF OF THE WEEK

Civic pride cues entry into politics

This interview was so rewarding and enlightening, we hardly know where to begin. To say that today's chef of the week is with "such and such a company" would be an oversimplification.

James H. Wilson has been councilman of the Long Beach 6th District since April 7, 1970, and was re-elected, and also selected as vice mayor in 1975.

Professionally, Wilson is urban affairs specialist at General Data Company, Santa Monica. He says, "My dream for Long Beach is full employment, freedom from crime and decent housing."

Born in Temple, Tex., his family moved to California during World War II. He has been a resident of Long Beach 27 years.

Wilson attended Hamilton Junior and Polytechnic High Schools; Long Beach Evening High School and Long Beach City College, graduating from LBSU with a major in sociology. He also has a certificate of completion, City of Long Beach Supervisory Development.

In his role as Councilman, Wilson has planned, coordinated and developed workshops, seminars, and laboratories for community-based program staffs. He assisted industry in formulating manpower administration programs for the disadvantaged communities.

INTER-ACTION workshops between supervisors in industry and potential hard core employees, have also been part of Wilson's program as has the conducting of workshops around programs dealing with Title I, and Title VII programs.

Even before becoming councilman, Wilson was active in Long Beach projects. From 1951 to 1956, he served as preparator for the Long Beach Museum of Art; and in 1968-69, he served as project director of Long Beach Commission on Economics Opportunity Project Action and Community Teamwork known as PACT.

Wilson has to his credit organization of the Long Beach Peoples Credit Union. He is chairman of the voter registration drive in the Central Area; serves on the board of directors of both the Community Welfare Council, and the Community Coordinating Council, and is a member of the Mayor's Task Force on Housing in Long Beach.

COUNCILMAN JAMES H. WILSON

He served for 10 years as a trainer for Western Community Action Training, Inc.

He and his wife, Audrey, have a daughter, Cynthia, and a son, Ronald. Audrey says, "He enjoys presiding over the barbecue, and is an avid watcher of TV sports events. But most of his time is taken up with activities at the Neighborhood Facility Center, where he maintains office hours from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. each Saturday" Wilson adds, "Anyone can feel free to drop in during my Saturday hours."

His recipe today is for Chicken in the Pot. From the expression on his face, he's going to enjoy it!

CHICKEN IN THE POT

- 1/4 cup cooking oil
- 2 broilers or frying chickens, quartered
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1 teaspoon black pepper
- 1/2 cup flour
- 1 cup coarsely chopped onions
- 1/2 teaspoon powdered saffron
- 2 chicken bouillon cubes
- 6 cups boiling water
- 2 cups long grain rice
- 1 10-ounce package frozen peas, thawed

Heat oil in Dutch oven, wash chicken and pat dry...combine salt, pepper and flour and sprinkle over chicken on both sides. To begin, place 4 pieces in hot oil to brown lightly on both sides. Remove from oil, brown remaining chicken pieces, then set aside. Pour onions into oil and saute for five minutes, stir in saffron, bouillon cubes and boiling water. Add browned chicken and bring liquid to a boil. Cover and simmer for 45 minutes. Stir in rice and cover to simmer for an additional 15 minutes. Add thawed peas, cover and continue to simmer until peas are done. Serves 6.

FASCINATING FABRICS

Leno—great new revival

A recent fashion photo and caption proclaimed: "Leno of polyester and cotton is a natural for this long dress. The stand-up collar, long full sleeves and tie belt, combined with the delicate surface texture of the fabric, are important directions for spring, '76." Frequent reference to "leno" appears in other fashion forecasts bracketed with allusion to sheer, feminine fabric.

What is leno? It's an open-weave fabric somewhat akin to gauze, but with more durability and sophistication than the peasantry look of the latter. In weaving leno, the lengthwise yarns on the loom work in pairs; one above the other. When the crosswise yarn is shot over and under the two, a twist occurs. The twist locks the yarn in place.

This tricky method produces a lightweight fabric with strength, resistance to slippage or distortion and a distinctive lacy-look in a soft-to-crisp texture. The airiness of the weave ranges from marquisette to dress and shirting fabric.

The weaving method requires strong yarn. Originally made from linen thread, its name derived from "linon," French for flax. The first styling was quite open and the obvious diamond pattern of the interlocking yarn resulted in the nickname of marquisette, after the marquis diamond.

WHEN SELECTING a pattern for leno fabric, avoid one with detailed seams, set-in pockets or a slim tailored look or the tube. Look for simple lines, the least number of seams and darts, easy, full styling that can be belted. Leno has a special illusive character. Pattern styling should make the most of it.

Sheer leno fabric provides an exciting effect when underlined with fabric of contrasting color. Cut underlining from the same pattern pieces as the garment. Stitch the underlining into the seam with the fashion fabric. Seam edges may be trimmed straight, pinked or overcast lightly.

When using collars and cuffs, trim the seam allowance to hairline width. To finish a plain neckline, use bias binding rather than a shaped facing. Buttons and buttonloops are preferable to buttonholes or zippers.

Do not cut leno or any sheer fabric on a polished surface, carpet or floor. In the absence of a felt surface, pin sheeting tightly over the cutting board or table.

Baste seams and darts by hand, rather than using machine basting as soft, sheer fabric may pucker. Today's leno fabric is usually a blend of polyester and cotton, which may be stitched with a combination polyester and cotton thread of fine dimension.

Sewing machine adjustment will depend on the specific fabric, which may range from obviously open weave to tighter structure. Here are some general guidelines: Tension may need to be reduced. Pressure should be average to light. Stitch length appropriate for sheer fabric is 15 to 20 stitches per inch. Machine needle required is size No. 9 or 10. Test stitching for any new construction technique on a double scrap of fabric.

DESIGNER PATTERN

Easy to sew, easier to wear

Few seams, no tricky details to sew and the result is the most romantic, graceful dress you could possibly choose this spring. Dominic Rompollo designed this success of the fashion season to look and be effortless in all ways. The attached poncho is all one flat piece. It floats over a dress that's caught at the waist by a drawstring through a casing (easiest fitting ever). You'll enjoy the feeling of movement in Printed Pattern M253 — it makes every gesture memorable. The original is silky crepe banded with satin ribbon. Consider also sheer cotton.

Printed Pattern M253 is available in misses' sizes 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18. Size 12 (bust 34) requires 3 1/2 yards of 45-inch fabric.

Please send $1.25 for Printed Pattern M253 to Independent Press Telegram, Pattern Department, P.O. Box 59, Old Chelsea Station, New York, N.Y. 10011. (Add 25 cents for first class mail and special handling). Print plainly YOUR NAME, ADDRESS with ZIP, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

ADVICE TO THE TAXLORN

Inherits own money

DEAR MR. SMITH: My father died in London in January of 1975. He was holding some shares in his name and money I was forced to leave behind when I left Vienna in 1938. I now have received some of this money from England. Does the bank I do business with in this country report monies received from England to the IRS? What taxes (and what kind) if any, do I owe to the IRS on these remittances? The money (nearly 80 per cent) was mine to begin with, only I couldn't take it out of Austria, whereas my father could. Inheritance taxes were paid on my father's estate in England. — W.O.

I believe that you should report on your 1975 Form 1040, only that part of the remit-jacob

tances that represent taxable income items, such as interest and dividends actually earned or received after the date of your father's death.

Since you can substantiate that the funds came from your father's estate, I'd not be concerned about any reports your bank may be required to furnish to the IRS.

DEAR MR. SMITH: I am the owner of 500 shares of stock, and the company has gone bankrupt. What is the best way to use this loss on my income tax? — G.L.

Report the loss on Schedule D, Form 1040, as if you had sold your shares on December 31, 1975, at a price of zero.

DEAR MR. SMITH: Recently my wife and I were given five Series E government bonds by her father. Two of these have been matured 15 years, one about 10 years, and the other two have about three years to go. In computing the income tax on these, does one use the value of the bonds when we received them, or the actual cost when they were bought. I have also heard that interest from government bonds was not taxable. Is that true? — I.M.

For this type of bond (which pays interest only at redemption), you report as interest income the total increase in value, starting with the date of the gift.

On your federal returns for 1975 and later years you have two choices: 1) Report as interest income, the increase in value each year, or 2) wait until you redeem the bonds.

Interest from U.S. Bonds is exempt only from state income tax — not from federal income tax. Do not confuse this with state and municipal bond interest.

DEAR MR. SMITH: I am a retired judge who on occasion assists on vacations or overflow. For this I waive any salary but I do receive a per diem allowance of $30 plus mileage. Is this per diem allowance to be reported as gross income and taxable? The IRS tax information service says yes. An instructor in a federal income tax law school course says no. Commerce Clearing House (2296-1426) states an accounting is deemed to have been made if the employees per diem allowance does not exceed $44. See TIR No. 1299, 8/74. — J.W.

The references you cite do not appear to apply to commuting mileage, or for meals, unless traveling away from home. I do not believe that a per diem or mileage arrangement will automatically make deductible those expenses, which are personal. I believe you should report the allowances as income, and deduct your actual deductible expenses.

DEAR MR. SMITH: We have paid all sorts of legal expenses to settle matters between my husband and his former wife, including support for his children. Are any of these deductible? What about payments made to his ex-wife? — R.D.

Generally, legal fees and expenses paid to obtain a divorce will be non-deductible. By going to court some taxpayers have won the right to deduct legal fees for tax advice on the consequences of divorce. Also, wives have won, in court, the right to deduct legal fees related to obtaining alimony.

Payments to the ex-wife pursuant to court order for support, are deductible as alimony unless the payments are made for the support of the children. If payments for children exceed 50 of their total support, the children may be claimed as dependents. Other non-periodic payments are not deductible.

Irish cottage holiday with a difference

County Clare, Ireland

At a glance, these Irish cottages look like all others in the village: Thatched roof. Whitewashed walls. A painted half door. Inside there's a walk-in peat fireplace. But —

These are built for rent to tourists. So the floor flagstones are underlaid with radiant heating. Electric radiators in the walls. And there's an all-electric kitchen.

Write Irish-Rent-A-Cottage, Shannon Airport, Ireland. Or Irish Tourist Board, 510 W. Sixth St., Los Angeles 90014.

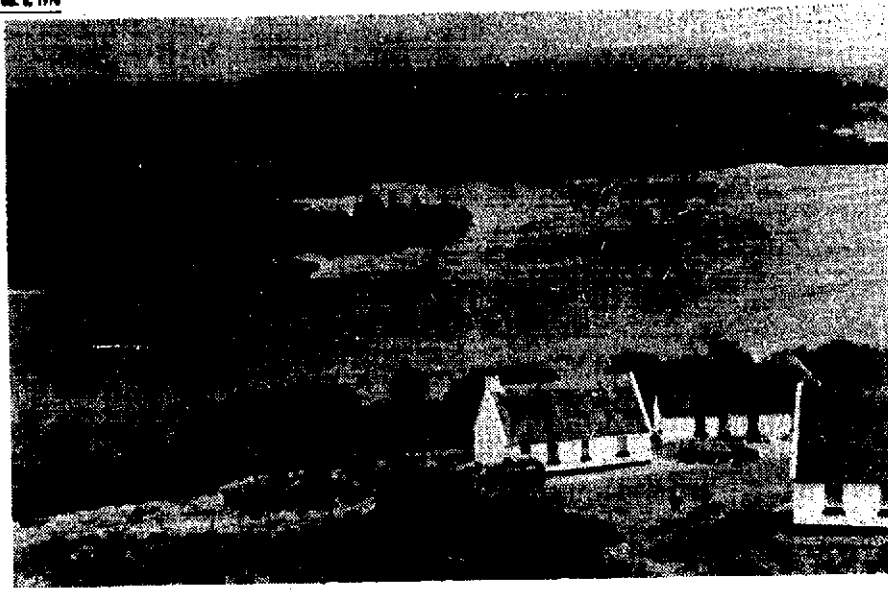

stan delaplane

I TOOK ONE of these cottages for a couple of weeks. Small village. One pub-grocery. Small river flowing into Galway Bay.

Eleven are now being built for sale in Connemara. Price around $30,000 leasehold for 999 years.

Financing seems to be impossible in Ireland. However, if you're an artist, a writer or a musician, Ireland doesn't tax you. God bless the Irish, says I.

The Irish Tourist Board and the British Tourist Authority, 612 S. Flower St., Los Angeles, 90017, also have lists of Farmhouse Accommodations. Great summer vacation if you have children. Reasonable.

(With the pound and dollar scooting up and down, plus inflation, I can't get into print with firm figures.)

IF YOU'RE STOCKING a few daydreams of life abroad, England is loaded with antique homes for sale: "Redundant church..." is one listing. Another, "The building dates back to Elizabethan times when it was used as a jail."

Historic houses qualify if they were built before 1800. Which may mean the plumbing is chancy. But nearly all have gardens — ground space was cheaper in those jolly days.

It looks like Kaanapali beach on the island of Maui will be wall-to-wall condominiums. Many built. Many building. Price of $80,000 seems average.

Plenty to rent. Both United and Western Airlines have fly-and-rent plans and will send you a brochure. Prices are reasonable.

Baja Airlines to add route

Baja Airlines, the nation's only international commuter airline, will expand services starting March 18 with two flights weekly from Long Beach to La Paz, capital of Baja California South, and other resorts on the Cabo San Lucas tip of the Mexican peninsula.

With headquarters at 4100 Donald Douglas Dr., Long Beach Airport, Baja Airlines now flies regularly scheduled flights to 15 destinations in Baja California and the State of Sonora on the northern Mexican mainland.

Flights to La Paz will depart Long Beach at 7:30 a.m. Thursdays and Sundays, with a stop at San Diego at 8 a.m. No change of plane will be necessary. Round trip fares will be $200 to La Paz and $220 to Cabo San Lucas.

Destinations in the Cabo area will be Punta Pescadero, Rancho Buena Vista, Punta Colorado, Hotel Palmia and Hotel Cabo San Lucas.

Return flights will leave Cabo San Lucas at 9:40 a.m. Fridays and Sundays. Passengers will be picked up at the individual hotel airstrips in the Cabo area and leave La Paz at 12:01 p.m. for arrival in San Diego at 5 p.m. and Long Beach at 6 p.m.

The airline, which flies Volper D18S Trigear aircraft on its routes, will offer package vacations with the Los Arcos and El Presidente hotels in La Paz and the Punta Pescadero, Rancho Buena Vista, Punta Colorado, Cabo San Lucas, Solmar and Finis-terra resort hotels in the Cabo San Lucas area.

SITMAR TO MEXICO

THE MOST SPACIOUS SHIP CRUISING THE MEXICAN RIVIERA!

Sitmar's magnificent Liberian-registered T.S.S. Fairsea is the largest, most spacious luxury cruise ship sailing to Mexico. Everything is more lavish and luxurious.

But there's much, much more! You'll be pampered by the gracious Italian service of our 500-man crew. You'll savor our superb continental cuisine prepared by 54 European chefs. You'll enjoy fabulous live entertainment. You'll visit the most colorful and exciting ports on the Mexican Riviera — like Acapulco and Puerto Vallarta — and spend more time ashore for sightseeing and shopping during Mexico's best season.

Come sail on a Sitmar 7, 10 or 11-day Mexican Riviera cruise. There's still time to book excellent accommodations to the most unforgettable vacation of your life. Ask your travel agent. He knows.

Cruises to Mexico, Alaska, Hawaii, Canada and Alaska

THE MARCH 2nd CRUISE FEATURES THE SENSATIONAL DELLA REESE!

"We will be in Japan (my husband on business) and would like to know of any customs we should observe to make the best impression."

Wear slip-on-and-off shoes. You'll be in and out of them a lot. They come off in entering Japanese homes, hotels and restaurants. There'll be slippers to put on.

Now — you wear slippers on hardwood floors. But — going into a room with tatami — straw matting — you take off the slippers and leave them at the door.

Japanese bow — some will shake hands but probably wish they didn't have to. Hand-to-hand touch is unpleasant for all people in the Far East.

If you are the host in a restaurant, seat your guest of honor with his back to the little alcove with the hanging scroll and the flower arrangement.

JAPANESE BUSINESSMEN exchange cards with every bow. Tell the airline to have some printed in Japanese and waiting for you — if you're being met you'll start using them right away. I know PanAm and CP Air will do this. I imagine other lines do it too.

SITMAR TO THE PANAMA CANAL

FLY FREE FOR OUR TRANS-CANAL CRUISES!

Sitmar's magnificent Liberian-registered T.S.S. Fairwind is among the largest, most spacious luxury cruise ships sailing through the Panama Canal. Everything is lavish and luxurious.

But there's much, much more! You'll be pampered by the gracious Italian service of our 500-man crew on each ship. You'll savor our superb continental cuisine prepared by 54 European chefs. You'll enjoy fabulous live entertainment! You'll visit the most exciting ports in both the Caribbean and the Mexican Riviera...and experience the once-in-a-lifetime thrill of sailing through the Canal!

And you'll fly free when you sail on our 17 or 18-day one-way Canal cruises!

Or take the once-in-a-lifetime 35-day round-trip cruise. The first Trans-Canal voyage leaves Florida on May 15th, with four other voyages later in the year. These cruises sell out early, but there are still excellent accommodations for the most unforgettable vacation of your life. Ask your travel agent. She knows.

Sitmar & Cruises
The Cruise Line to the Americas, Europe, Canada and Alaska

BEGINNING FEBRUARY 28, 1976:

Announcing a new cruise line to the Mexican Riviera offering glorious vacations at sea for the lowest prices of any cruise line.

The ship is the newly redecorated Universe—a 625-passenger one-class cruise liner loaded with all the facilities you'd ever want (see below) for fun-filled cruising. Fully stabilized and air conditioned. We sail from Los Angeles.

We've scheduled 12 Mexican Riviera cruises this Spring, from 4 days to 12 days in length. All at lower prices than any other cruise line.

Join our Inaugural Carnival Cruise, February 28!

Take a week (and a weekend) and come with us on a 9-day cruise featuring Mazatlan at Carnival Time—one of the 3 biggest Carnivals in the world! Visit Puerto Vallarta and Cabo San Lucas, too. Priced as low as $390 for everything. But hurry, it's the big event of our cruise year, and time is running out. (Cruise repeated March 20 and April 10.)

ALL THIS FROM $40 A DAY:
(Less than you'd pay for a decent room alone, in many resorts.)

Shops for your personal needs, plus beauty and barber shops.

Playroom for children.

Gymnasium.

Casino.

Cruise Director Jim Everett — one of the favorites in the West, with 14 years' experience creating good times for cruise guests.

Deck activities — sunning, shuffleboard and other sports.

Swimming pool and poolside bar.

Golf driving range.

Medical clinic with doctor and nurses on duty.

Comfortable staterooms, all with private bath/shower.

Dancing every night to your favorite dance music by the ship's band — in the romantic nightclub, or on the deck by starlight.

Discotheque.

Numerous lounges throughout the ship's public areas for quiet relaxation.

Card rooms, library.

Delicious luncheon buffet, and formal table service at dinner.

5 meals a day.

Movies in our 200-seat theater.

PENNY-WISE TRAVELER

There are bargains in hotels if you search

They laughed when I asked for a hotel room for under $25.

In February in San Juan? No way! said four out of the five travel agents I tried. The fifth probably had had hospital training and treated me more gently.

"You wouldn't like them, dear," she said in the tone of someone who has lived and learned. Maybe so, I thought. But that was my top limit and it seemed a fair figure. So I kept dialing.

ABOUT 10 MINUTES later I hit paydirt in the form of an Eastern Airlines reservations clerk. The very mention of San Juan obviously pushed her happy memories button, and we were the best of phone friends in no time.

"Oh, I never pay more than $12," she said, "But of course we get discounts. If I were you, I'd go to the Excelsior. It's a little out of the way, but there's good bus service, the place is really clean, there's a pool and a terrific coffee shop with a Weight-Watchers' menu."

Jane Morse

"There's even a beauty shop in the basement. Oh yes, there's also a TV in your room and a coffeemaker and they bring you free ice and a newspaper every day. And you have a little balcony to sit on if you want to sun alone or just have a drink and read."

It seemed perfectly clear that the Excelsior and I were meant for each other. And so we were — at $22 a night.

That was two years ago; the Excelsior still lives (but with winter singles now $25 to $36), and my only regret is that I didn't get the airline person's name. When it comes to spotting and evaluating budget accommodations in the Caribbean, there's a hole bigger than the Grand Canyon.

IT IS, YOU'LL notice, remarkably easy to get information about high-price places. But it's almost worth your life to get the same detailed news about the "bargains," much less learn that there are some.

After studying the problem at length, I think the only way to find a winner among lower-price Caribbean lodgings is to get lucky. Fortunately, it's possible to help your luck along.

The first move is to avoid getting stuck on the wrong island. There is no sense in paying a premium for a nice quiet piece of "paradise" when what you care about is action, or having your heart set on white sand beaches and getting gravel instead.

By all means, get all the hotel information you can before you go. The tourist offices have lists, but be sure to ask for hotels and guesthouses; guesthouses sometimes are overlooked because, after all, you did say "hotels." Guesthouses, however, can be pretty grand.

Cruise South to carnival

The all-first-class S.S. Universe Campus of Orient Overseas Line will make her inaugural cruise from her new home port of Los Angeles on Feb. 28th, with the nine-day "Carnival in Mazatlan" cruise also visiting Puerto Vallarta and Cabo San Lucas along the Mexican Riviera.

The newly-refurbished 625-passenger cruise liner features the lowest rates of any West Coast cruise line. Fares for the inaugural cruise range from $390 to $700, which amounts to as little as $40 a day.

The cruise will depart Los Angeles at noon, Saturday, Feb. 28, and arrive back in Los Angeles at 9 a.m. Sunday, March 7, which means five workdays at sea — an ideal time period for passengers taking one-week vacations.

Similarly, to permit passengers the greatest amount of time to view and participate in the colorful "Carnival" festivities in Mazatlan on March 2, the Universe will stay in port until 10 p.m.

MAZATLAN is also justly famed for its intriguing Malecon or waterfront area and alluring beaches. Cobblestoned streets and Gringo Gulch compose just two attractions of Puerto Vallarta, long one of the world's more renowned romantic settings.

Southernmost point of Baja California, Cabo San Lucas is a blend of modern resorts coupled with charming Mission-style architecture. There are also such natural attractions as jagged, water-sculptured pinnacles and boat rides which reveal iridescent tropical fish cavorting in submarine canyons.

Low-cost shore excursions are available in each port of call.

The Universe will sail on a series of four to 12-day cruises to the Mexican Riviera throughout 1976, the only West Coast line scheduled to sail all year to ports from Acapulco to Ensenada. Additional information on these cruises may be obtained from travel agents or from Orient Overseas Line, 9050 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, Ca. 90211.

Guadeloupe

The French island of Guadeloupe is rapidly becoming a prime Caribbean tourist target. This season will see the inauguration of Air France wide-cabin Airbus service from New York and the opening of more than 1,000 new luxury beachfront hotel rooms.

Enjoy more of Mexico with Aeromexico

You can enjoy more of Mexico with Aeromexico because no one else goes to so many places in Mexico as Aeromexico. Stands to reason, doesn't it? After all, we're the airline of Mexico. We offer you great frequency and attractive fares and destinations either direct from Los Angeles or just a hop away from Tijuana. Make a selection of several destinations. You'll love them all... and getting to them on Aeromexico.

Big Town

Take your choice of these... continental Mexico City, charming Guadalajara, bustling Monterrey, exciting Veracruz.

Little Town

Remote San Cristobal de las Casas, historic Campeche, attractive Puebla, beautiful Cuernavaca.

Beach Town

We can take you to: Acapulco, Puerto Vallarta, Zihuatanejo/Ixtapa, Cancun, Mazatlan, Manzanillo, Cozumel, La Paz and convenient Cabo San Lucas.

Hill Town

Take your pick of the cities reflecting Mexico's colonial past: Taxco, San Miguel de Allende, Queretaro, Guanajuato.

Fish Town

La Paz, capital of Baja California Sur; Cabo San Lucas at the peninsula's tip; Guaymas, famous for shrimp and Mazatlan noted for spectacular fishing tournaments.

Wish Town

What are you wishing for? Solitude? We'll take you to Puerto Angel. Excitement? Morelia. Charm? Mulege.

They're going back to the 'sticks'

By JULES LOH

HARRISON, Ark. (AP)—Americans since Thomas Jefferson have generally scorned and mistrusted their big cities. Now, apparently, they're doing something about it. They're leaving them.

A mid-decade federal study shows that the long migration from the country to the city not only has halted—a fact noted for the first time in this century in the 1970 census—but that the historic reversal has speeded up.

During the past five years the nation's metropolitan counties, those with a city of at least 50,000 people, grew less than 3 percent in population while non-metropolitan counties gained more than 4 per cent.

What that means is that, contrary to the dreary pattern of the countryside in the years since World War II, not all small towns are dying. Not even, necessarily, the ones off the beaten path, those the four-lane missed. That bit of bad luck was once taken as an unfailing augury of doom. No longer.

"I read the job applications," said Howard McColey, one of this rural area's larger industrial employers. "They come from all over, but what's more important is that people born here who had moved away are coming back."

The question the bare census figures don't answer is why. This little town in northwest Arkansas would seem a good place to try to find out.

Harrison, home of 8,876 souls, is the largest town within an 80-mile radius spanning eight counties in the Arkansas-Missouri Ozarks, the hill country celebrated in legend, lore and Lil' Abner as one of the backwoodsiest places in the land.

The town is served by no railroad, reached by no Interstate highway, watered by no stream capable of floating anything larger than a canoe. Which is to say Harrison benefits from none of the time-honored Chamber of Commerce formulas for growth. That being so, during the 1940s and '50s folks fled these mountains in droves.

But during the past five years Harrison's population has leapt no less than 23 per cent. Industrial development has doubled. Land prices in some parts of the area have soared 1,000 per cent.

"I'd be afraid to put any price on a piece of land unless I really wanted to sell it," said Richard Hudson, whose own recent history reflects that of Harrison's.

Hudson took a degree in agriculture in 1954 at the state university figuring to come home and work the family's 70 acres in Crooked Creek Valley. He did, but also got into real estate nine years later to help ends meet during a drought. Today blue-ribbed herefords graze on his 450 acres, and he owns an assortment of downtown buildings plus a motel where the restaurant serves sowbelly and biscuits—that melt in your mouth.

"When I put my first broker's ad in the Harrison Times in 1963 there were four of us," Hudson said. "Five years ago there were about 70. Today there are more than 150 licensed brokers listed." That about tells what's been going on in Harrison and Boone County.

What's been going on is the more important because this new, or rediscovered, allure of Our Town appears to be part of a massive nationwide population shift away from the industrialized North and toward the South and West. It is bound to have political effect when Congress is reapportioned after the 1980 census.

Since the 1970 census the nation has gained 10 million in population (to 218,121,000). The between-census study shows that 85 per cent of that growth was in 29 southern and western states. The only northern states to gain more than the national average of 4.8 per cent were Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, all largely rural.

In some areas the change has been as profound, if not as dramatic, as in northwest Arkansas. West Virginians, for instance, used to sing a mountain ballad about what the three Rs meant to kids in that state: "Reading, 'Riting and the Road to Columbus." But in the past five years the southern Appalachian coal fields stopped losing people and gained 6.3 per cent—about the same percentage New York State lost.

Similar gains were recorded in rural counties of the Rockies and the upper Great Lakes.

Many would concede that life in a small town, if not as intellectually stimulating or as conducive to striking it rich as life in a big city, has always seemed saner. Surely rising urban crime rates, high taxes and other living costs account in some measure for today's drift back to the countryside.

But those obvious differences have been true, more or less, for years. Yet not since 1920, the year the nation's urban population outstripped the rural, have a majority of Americans found such homespun attractions as 4-H Club socials, quilting

America on the move, but back to the sticks

know. He was in graduate school during the Sixties and now has come back to his beloved Ozarks to be president — and head cheerleader — of North Arkansas Community College.

The college serves seven counties and Baker periodically jostles his car over rugged mountain roads, some hardly more than trails, to talk personally to high school seniors in the outlying villages: Mt. Judea, Snowball, Eula, Tilly. He tells them they no longer have to leave home for four years at great expense to go to college. They can get two years right at home, the rest later, when they're older and the commitment and cost are reduced by half.

The community college opened in the fall of 1975 and already is straining under a student load it didn't expect to reach until 1980. Thus it is difficult to say whether the school is a result of the area's rapid growth, or a cause of it, or both. It most certainly is a factor. There are others.

"The back-to-earth movement is a real thing," Baker said. "I don't mean the hippie communes, I mean the need everybody seems to feel to get to a place unspoiled, uncrowded. Maybe it's a result of the environmental movement. With me, at my rate, it's almost mystical. There's a permanence to these hills that gives my life stability.

"Still, about twice a year my wife and I take off for a weekend in New Orleans. We need that, too. The point is, you can do both now. Travel nowadays is so easy that you don't have to move to the city to taste its fruits. You can satisfy those periodic hunger pangs with visits. That was not as true in the days before campers and interstates and motels at every crossroads.

"It's also true that television has taken some of the mystery out of the big cities. The six o'clock news gives some people as much contact with the concrete as they really want."

Baker spoke of yet another factor, more subtle because it deals with attitudes. It's a recent development, perhaps a spinoff of the rebirth of ethnic pride so evident in the past decade.

"We've developed a pride in our local culture. I don't mean that in the past a person would say, 'I'm moving to Kansas City to work because I'm ashamed of my land,' but it was part of the reason, a subconscious thing. I know, I grew up here. Now we've gone full circle and proudly celebrate the customs and folkways of the Ozarks. I would guess the same is true in other parts of the country."

Perhaps, but it is also true that there are more opportunities to work in Harrison today because of an influx of new industry lured by Harrison's own efforts and tax breaks granted by the state.

Federal programs, too, begun years ago are now ripening, bettering the rural quality of life. Boone County has received more than $1 million in federal revenue-sharing funds since the program began in 1972. Harrison's first sewer system was a New Deal project of the Thirties; today, with federal help, towns like Harrison can have an airport. Federal funds are in evidence everywhere you look: libraries, hospitals, parks. Right now Harrison is planning a new civic center, with federal help. Federal recreational projects have brought tourist dollars to the Ozarks and also attracted battalions of retired persons, who today can quit work at a younger age with larger incomes. Canoe traffic on the spectacular Buffalo River nearby was up 21 per cent last year.

With more money to spend and a better educated, better traveled citizenry to direct growth, Harrison and towns like it have become considerably more sophisticated than the Grover Corners of a prior era. The Boar's Head Players, for example, provide Harrison with fine amateur theater. The North Arkansas Concert Association imports programs from November through April, fare such as the St. Louis Symphony, the Stan Kenton orchestra, the Norman Luboff Choir. There are dances at the country club. (dues: $180 a year), poolside parties, tennis, golf. Mencken would have a hard time recognizing today's "yokels."

"In many ways we've got the best of both worlds," said Bevan Dunlap, executive vice president of the Harrison Chamber of Commerce. "In fact, some people are worrying, a bit prematurely, I think, that we're going too fast, getting too big."

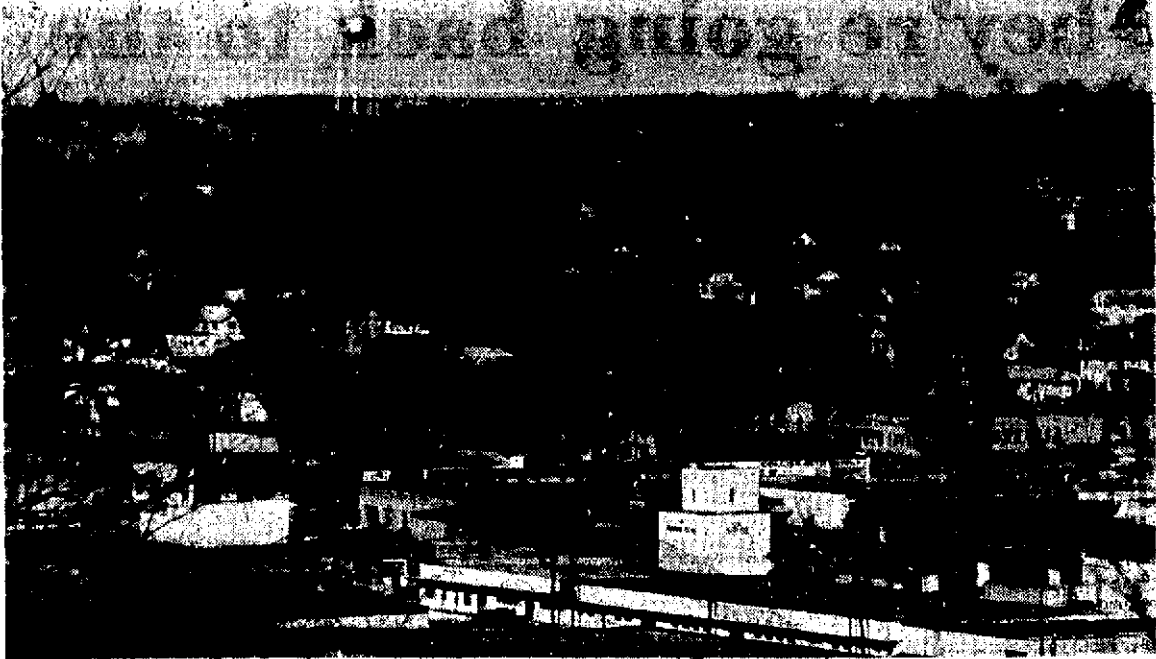

Over the past five years Harrison has lured to its industrial park, once a cow pasture on the edge of town, manufacturers of such diverse products as fishing rods, meat processing equipment and electronic air purifiers (ironically, since Ozark air tests out as just about the purest in the land) to complement established plants that turn out products from patio grills to parking meters, metal furniture, chalk boards, paper boxes, insulated glass and ornamental iron.

Unlike so many small towns of the past, Harrison is decidedly not dependent on one or two domineering factories. In fact, one argument for establishing the community college was a local need for a wide assortment of skills.

"If other towns our size haven't done as well it's because they haven't tried," Dunlap said, rifling through a stack of current requests from industries for information about Harrison.

"Even the fact that we have no railroad or interstate or waterway hasn't been a large liability. In some ways it's been a blessing in disguise. We've attracted clean industries rather than the heavy, smoke-belching type that could harm the character of Harrison."

It would, indeed, be a shame to harm the character of Harrison. There is, as Bill Baker said, something stabilizing about an oak-shaded courthouse square surrounded by tidy shops; about reading your neighbor's name in "Today's Birthdays" listed in the daily paper along with the weighty world news; about hearing a radio announcer with an identifiable regional accent report on the turkey-calling contest in, where else, Yellville; about shutting down the plant the first day of deer season, as

Howard McColley does, because nobody will show up for work anyhow.

"I talk to a lot of newcomers who come in to open their accounts," said Jerry McFarland, president of the First National Bank. "They all think they've died and gone to heaven." (The First National, incidentally, doubled its deposits in five years, to the day.)

What the newcomers have found, one learns by asking them, is maybe not heaven but a pleasant place on earth, a small town, where the amenities of the big city have become increasingly available, or at least accessible.

Small wonder America's mobile society is so rapidly making that discovery.

NEW YORK — One of the things you may have noticed lately is that there is no cure for the common cold.

That may not surprise you, but it is rather a surprise to some scientists and physicians. Ten or 15

Genetics lab rules proposed

JUDITH RANDAL
Long Beach News Service

WASHINGTON — A prestigious scientific committee has proposed rules that would permit researchers to transplant genes from one form of life to another without risk of creating dangerous new germs.

The rules — made available Saturday before their release today at a National Institutes of Health meeting — were proposed as a means to end a scientific controversy that involves the well-being of the public.

One faction has maintained that the genetics-engineering experiments are crucial to medical progress, the development of better drugs and the creation of new plant strains to feed a hungry world. The other has been hesitant lest germs resulting from the gene transplants escape from the laboratory and prove impossible to control.

Dr. Donald S. Fredrickson, the institutes' director, will decide on how strict the rules should be after listening to two days of public debate on the issue this week. Meanwhile, thanks to the controversy, the experiments have been suspended for more than a year.

The new technology was made possible by the discovery about six years ago that certain enzymes could be used to snip lengths of the genetic material called DNA into precisely predetermined bits. This, in turn, has enabled scientists to put into bacteria genes from other species and strains of bacteria, viruses or other organisms.

The experiments have made it possible for man to break the species barrier and cause living things that are genetically totally dissimilar to mate and reproduce.

This unique feature promises revolutionary potential both for the investigation of basic biological processes and for approaches to important practical problems in medicine and agriculture," the advisory committee said in the preamble to the suggested rules.

The rules would classify experiments funded by the government according to their potential risk. Some would be ruled out as too dangerous, others would have to be conducted in special isolation laboratories — there are about a dozen in this country — and still others could be undertaken with less stringent precautions.

Two kinds of safety measures are available and could easily be combined. One requires good laboratory equipment and rigorously trained personnel. The other involves the use of bacteria which have only one chance in a billion of survival if accidentally released into the outside world. For example, scientists have created bacteria that cannot live within normal temperature ranges or unless supplied with special forms of nourishment.

Whatever rules Fredrickson decides on, they will apply to all American scientists whose work is funded by the government and almost certainly will be observed by privately funded researchers and scientists in other nations, too.

CHOO! Don't sit up waiting for a cold cure

years ago you could find quite a few experts who believed that the mid-1960s was a reasonable time to expect either a vaccine that would prevent a common cold or a drug that would cure it.

Today we have neither. What went wrong?

The vaccine idea was done in by the knowledge that many, many viruses were to blame and that they couldn't build a successful vaccine on a package of those viruses.

Now scientists know that there are about 150 different viruses capable of causing a cold. It's impossible to build protection against all those viruses into one vaccine. So there isn't going to be a vaccine against the common cold.

How about an anticold drug? Well, if you doctor yourself, you can choose from many well-advertised over-the-counter products that have been described by competent medical authorities as having roughly the same effectiveness as chicken soup. If you go to a physician, there's a good chance of coming away with a prescription for an antibiotic that can cause serious side effects, but is ineffective against the cold. Antibiotics fight bacteria, not viruses, and a cold is a viral infection.

So why aren't there good antiviral drugs around? That question got attention from the experts who met here last week in the New York Academy of Sciences' Third Conference on Antiviral Substances. Their conclusion: The drugs aren't available for reasons that include money, scientific difficulties and psychology.

Dr. Ernest C. Herrmann Jr. of the Peoria School of Medicine, chairman of the conference, put the stress on the attitude of pharmaceutical company decision-makers: "There are people in important positions who harbor the idea that developing antiviral drugs is not possible," he said.

To Herrmann, the main problem is "convincing people that antiviral drugs are the way to go." But to others at the conference, the scientific problems of developing such drugs loom larger.

The challenge is to kill the viruses without killing human cells, which isn't easy. A virus is a very small parasite, consisting of a small bit of genetic material wearing a protein coat. The virus invades a cell (which is a much larger, more complicated entity), seizes control of the cell's apparatus and makes many more viruses that invade other cells.

The most promising antiviral drugs, said Dr. J.L. Melnick of Baylor University College of Medicine, cause so much damage to cells in the process of stopping the virus that they can't be used for treating illnesses, especially minor ailments such as the common cold.

A decade ago, there were high hopes for interferon, a virus-fighting compound that is produced by living cells. Anything that is created by cells to fight invaders offers obvious safety advantages; antibiotics, for example, are products of living organisms.

Alas, interferon has turned out to be expensive to isolate, difficult to characterize and nearly impossible to use in ordinary clinical situations. At the moment, interferon is, if anything, less promising than it was 10 years ago.

Some synthetic antiviral compounds have come along and are on the road to the patient. Two of those compounds, ribavirin, which seems to attack a large number of viruses and could be usable against influenza and the cold, and isoprinosine, another candidate for a cold cure, got their share of attention at the conference.

Enter the final consideration: money. The Food and Drug Administration requires extensive testing for drug approval, and that testing can strain a company's financial resources.

A single test using 60 volunteers can cost $25,000, said Robert W. Sidwell of ICN Pharmaceuticals, Inc., which owns ribavirin.

Literally dozens of such tests, with a total cost of perhaps $2.5 million, are needed to get FDA approval of the drug for use against any specific illness — and ribavirin is being tested for several different illnesses.

The drug already is being sold in Mexico and other countries where controls are much less strict. The reason for going slow in the United States is the possibility of side effects. In some animal tests, the drug has been found to cause birth defects (the label says it should not be used by women of child-bearing age), and high doses have been found to cause anemia in some subjects.

All of these barriers — psychological, scientific, financial — are surmountable, but not quickly. With luck, you can look for an antiviral drug such as ribavirin to reach the American market this side of 1990. But that's no help this cold, windy winter. Anyway, gesundheit.

Canada paying off Indians for 'stolen' lands

By JIM POLING
Canadian Press Writer

OTTAWA, Canada — A Blackfoot Indian chief meeting before the beginning of this century with two government treaty negotiators dropped to his knees and pulled up a clump of parched Canadian prairie.

"As a present," he told the white men, "we will give you anything we have that you can take with you. But the land, never!"

Control of that land passed inevitably to the white people, some huge parcels signed away in treaties, some merely absorbed as a new Canadian society rolled relentlessly west and north.

Now, more than 100 years after the first treaties were signed, the Canadian government has admitted that the natives still have valid claims to vast tracts, and negotiation of those claims has begun.

The native people are claiming more than 1.8 million square miles, almost one-half the total area of Canada, and much of it immensely rich in resources. They say these are their traditional lands, never ceded to Ottawa or, in some cases, signed away through misunderstanding.

(Indians in the United States have started numerous state and federal court actions claiming treaty violations. The Indian Claims Commission alone has about 150 land right cases before it for consideration. In Maine, for example, two tribes which claim two-thirds of the land of that state have instituted a suit for $300 million.)

Involved in Canada are five basic areas: northern Quebec, on which agreement has been reached; the east side of the Northwest Territories, claimed by Eskimos; the Northwest Territories' west side, claimed by Indians; the Yukon, and most areas of British Columbia in Canada's Pacific coast.

Canada has 295,215 Indians and Metis (mixed French and Indian people) and about 20,000 Eskimos. There are about 500,000 Indians in the United States under government supervision.

The Quebec agreement, settling a claim on 132,000 square miles, an area slightly smaller than New Mexico, must be ratified within the next two months by 6,000 Cree and 4,000 Eskimos.

Basically, it gives the native people $225 million in tax-free funds over the next 20 years and exclusive fishing, hunting and trapping rights on 60,000 square miles, an area about the size of Georgia.

The natives in return must give up all their land rights, with the exception of lands in and around their communities, and agree to halt legal action aimed at stopping the giant James Bay hydro-electric project.

This is the first major native land-claims settlement in modern Canada.

The 15,000 Eskimos of the Northwest Territories are claiming 750,000 square miles, an area three times larger than Texas. The claim covers vast areas of potential mineral deposits, including the oil and natural gas-rich Mackenzie Delta. But James Arvaluk, president of Inuit Tapirist (Eskimo brotherhood), says his people are not interested in a settlement similar to that in northern Quebec. He says they do not want to stifle development, but want a say in how their territory is developed.

If the natives' claim is accepted, the so-called barren lands will become a separate territory called Nunavut (Our Land) with an eventual goal of self-government.

In the western section, the Indians and Metis have joined to claim 450,000 square miles of the 1.3-million-square-mile Northwest Territories. They say they want control over the land — twice the size of France — and not outright payment for it, and recognition as a nation within a nation.

In this case, the Indians surrendered the land in treaties signed in 1899 and 1921. But Justice William Morrow of the Northwest Territories Supreme Court ruled in 1973 that the 16,000 natives have a legal claim.

Ottawa has refused to say the treaties are invalid, although it has offered to negotiate. A monetary settlement of between $3 million and $5 billion has been mentioned.

However, the natives, who call themselves Dene (The People), say they want to be landlord over the territory, granting leases to resource companies and using the rent to finance development projects in their communities.

The 9,000 Yukon Indians appear to have adopted some of the thinking behind both the Quebec and Northwest Territories claims. They say money is of the least importance but their lawyer, Allen Lueck, has said a minimum cash settlement of $150 million is conceivable.

In British Columbia, with a native population just over 100,000, the claim covers almost the entire province, 368,000 square miles, or about half the size of Alaska. The claim still is embryonic and there are few details on what the Indians want.

Harold Cardinal, the president of the Indian Association of Alberta which has begun a legal action to gain total control of the potentially rich Alberta oil sands, says he is concerned about the northern Quebec settlement.

Pride, dignity and freedom must be restored, says George Manuel, president of the national Indian Brotherhood. He maintains that settlement of land claims and recognition of native rights would help bring these back.

Crowfoot, a powerful Blackfoot chief, gave that thinking to a white visitor about 100 years ago. According to legend he took a handful of clay, dropped it onto a fire and watched as it hardened and cooked.

"Now put your money on the fire. See if it will last as long as the clay."

"No," replied the visitor. "My money will burn because it is made of paper."

Said Crowfoot: "Your money is not as good as our land. The wind will blow it away. The fire will burn it. Water will rot it. Nothing will destroy our land."

It was not known if the MPLA-Cuban occupation of San Antonio do Zaire was part of an offensive to drive the FNLA out of the rest of the northern border strip.

The FNLA now controls only two towns near the Zaire border, San Salvador and Maquela do Zombo, according to information in Kinshasa.

EDVIN ZDOVC
Extremists' Victim?

Diplomat killed by gunmen

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Two gunmen assassinated a Yugoslav diplomat in a hail of revolver bullets Saturday as the 45-year-old father of two prepared to back his car out of the garage of his suburban home and drive to work.

Police said the identities of the killers of Consul Edvin Zdovc were unknown but did not rule out that the men were Croatian separatists. The West German government says several hundred extremists from the northwestern Yugoslav region around Zagreb operate in this country.

A caller to a New York radio station, WINS, said the Young Croatian Army for Freedom claimed responsibility for the shooting. He also said the group had shot five other persons in West Germany, but German officials had no such reports. The same group claimed responsibility for a bombing at the Yugoslav diplomatic mission in New York last year.

Developing countries' food production gains

By VICTOR SIMPSON

ROME (AP)—Preliminary figures show that developing countries had record food productions in 1975, marking a promising advance in the war on world hunger, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) here reported. It cautioned, however, that it had not yet established any firm trend that would signify a major breakthrough.

Food shortages requiring emergency outside assistance are now reported only in the Comoro Islands, Lebanon and Timor, all three troubled by internal strife. A year ago, there were 14 countries requiring outside assistance, including India, Bangladesh and Somalia.

The FAO attributed production increases chiefly to favorable weather conditions. India's rice crop, for example, was helped by the mildest monsoon in 20 years, it said.

FAO added that a heavier emphasis placed on agriculture by the traditionally hungry countries also played a role.

Yet, the organization still lists a half-billion persons as underfed or malnourished in a hunger belt stretching across Africa, Asia and portions of Latin America.

But in an optimistic assessment of the short-term food needs of the developing world—over the next six to nine months—an FAO spokesman said: "We are out of a crisis period. The problem is not to find the food, but the money. The food is there to be bought."

The developing countries as a whole achieved a record production of rice, wheat and coarse grains (corn, oats and barley) of 360 million tons, up 8 percent from 1974.

This was accomplished against a background of poor harvests in the Soviet Union and its Eastern European allies, which slowed the growth of total world food production, FAO analysts said. The Soviet government has confirmed that the 1975 grain harvest of 140 million tons was its worst in a decade.

FAO statistics showed that the developing countries marked their third successive yearly increase in production of wheat, the world's staple, which rose to 81.2 million tons in 1975 from 73.1 million tons the year before. Gains in the rice harvest were recorded as even greater, totaling 130 million tons, compared with 118 million in 1974.

In the same period, the developed countries, led by the United States, increased wheat production slightly from 138.7 million to 141.8 million tons, the preliminary figures showed.

Food specialists here say they are watching this year's harvests closely to see if the developing world is moving toward some level of self-sufficiency. The specially convened World Food Conference, held in Rome in 1974, stressed the urgency of developing agriculture in the Third World as the only solution to its dependency on the world marketplace or on outside aid.

Third World meeting ends

MANILA (AP) — A major conference of Third World representatives ended Saturday with general agreement on pressing the industrial countries for a "new international economic order."

But it left unsettled a fight among members over access of landlocked states to the sea and a proposal to set up a permanent conference office.

In a final document the ministers expressed impatience with the lack of progress so far and declared their "firm conviction to make full use of the bargaining power of the developing countries, through joint action" to gain a better deal for commodity producers. They also sought reorganization of world industrial production and reform of the international monetary system.

In speaking of bargaining and joint action, the ministers apparently referred to the power some Third World countries have through their control of oil and other vital commodities.

The conference, held in preparation for negotiations with developed countries in Nairobi, Kenya, in May, left the Third World "more and better prepared" for the talks, Philippines Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo said. Romulo served as conference president.

During the debate the meeting was closed to reporters. Conference authorities gave no reason.

Conference sources said Afghanistan proposed to reaffirm in the working committee's report the right of sea access. Iran and Pakistan, controlling the land routes from Afghanistan to the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean, objected and said the move was part of a Soviet effort to gain trade access to the Indian Ocean and to India.

The sources said the dispute lasted seven hours. The Philippine delegation proposed that the final document include both views, citing "reservations" expressed in the matter by some countries.

Conference officials said another point of disagreement was over a proposal to form a permanent secretariat for the Group of 77, as the organization of Third World ministers started in 1964 is known, to prepare for negotiations with the industrial world.

A Latin American group objected to the proposal, sources said, and insisted instead that there be "a working group... with the chairman on a rotating basis."

The Latin Americans were reported to fear that an institutionalized group opened the possibility of having Libya or Algeria heading it for a fixed period.

3 Russians reported dead in Angola war

By BRIAN JEFFRIES

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Western-backed forces fighting Communist-supplied troops in Angola said Saturday they killed three Russians in fighting around the coastal city of Novo Redondo.

A statement issued by the National Union (UNITA) also charged that for the first time Algerian pilots were being used to fly missile-carrying planes backing the Cuban and Soviet-supported forces of the Popular Movement (MPLA) in the Angolan civil war.

There was no independent verification of the charges and no immediate comment from the Soviet Union or Algeria.

The Russians were killed Friday, the statement said, during fighting between UNITA forces and an MPLA "guerrilla band" composed of Russians and Cubans around Novo Redondo, which is still reportedly in UNITA hands.

The aerial attacks have been concentrated around the inland central Angola town of Mussende, which UNITA confirmed earlier this week has been retaken by the MPLA.

The statement added that the aerial attacks by the missile-carrying planes, the make of which it did not identify, were expected to result in a high level of civilian casualties.

The statement did not say how UNITA was able to identify the pilots as Algerians.

Meanwhile, sources here said that the 15 British mercenaries wounded in the Angola fighting were being cared for in Kinshasa's main hospital.

The British Embassy said so far it had received no requests for aid from any of those wounded, "but if any requests are received we will give them the same consideration as any appeals for help from British citizens."

Earlier this week Zaire banned foreign mercenaries from passing through Kinshasa on their way to fight in Angola, but it made clear that any wishing to return home could do so through Zaire.

More than 200 British mercenaries were reported fighting in Angola, the majority of them with the Western-backed National Front (FNLA), which has been pushed back into a narrow strip of northern Angola bordering Zaire in recent reverses inflicted by the MPLA.

An American reporter said FNLA defenders had been driven out of San Antonio do Zaire, the last major FNLA stronghold in the north.

Robin Wright of the Christian Science Monitor said Saturday in Kinshasa that she had been permitted to enter San Antonio do Zaire earlier in the week. She said that on Friday at 8:45 a.m., MPLA troops led by Cubans in tanks and armored cars entered the city and were in control within a half hour. Most of the residents fled along with the FNLA soldiers, she reported.

It was not known if the MPLA-Cuban occupation of San Antonio do Zaire was part of an offensive to drive the FNLA out of the rest of the northern border strip.

The FNLA now controls only two towns near the Zaire border, San Salvador and Maquela do Zombo, according to information in Kinshasa.

Turk, U.S. pact near—but shaky

New York Times Service

ANKARA, Turkey — Turkey and the United States have made substantial progress in negotiating a new agreement on 26 American military installations but important differences remain, according to well-informed diplomats.

Accordingly, it is uncertain whether a draft of the pact will be ready before Foreign Minister Ihsan S. Cagyalangil visits Washington next week. The Americans would like the foreign minister to sign a new agreement during his trip. They then could resume operations at five intelligence-gathering installations in Turkey that have been idle since July.

The bases reflect a deeper problem in relations between Turkey and the United States, which have been allies since Washington proclaimed the Truman Doctrine in 1948 and took responsibility for Turkey's security.

"The real question," said a diplomat, "is whether their partnership will produce a stable, creditable deterrent at this end of NATO."

Most Turks are still bitter over the ban imposed last year on American arms sales. The mood has improved slightly since the ban was relaxed in October and negotiations on a new pact began, but the mood is still chilly.

One key to the relationship is Cyprus, since it was the Turkish use of American arms to invade the island in 1974 that led to the embargo. Talks between Greek and Turkish Cypriots are to resume in Vienna on Feb. 17. But few analysts here are optimistic.

Senators 'using U.S. computer to aid campaigns'

By BROOKS JACKSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some U.S. senators are keeping mailing lists of campaign donors, political volunteers and party workers in the Senate computer at taxpayer expense, according to court testimony.

The computer is used to address only mail sent under the franking privilege, with postage also paid by the taxpayers.

Joyce P. Baker, a former mail specialist for several Senate Republicans including John Tower, Charles Mathias and J. Glenn Beall, testified that one such mailing list was labeled simply "Fat Cats."

Others contain names and addresses of potential donors to future campaigns, potential campaign workers and even persons who have contributed money to candidates for the opposing party. Miss

Baker said.

She did not say which of the senators kept the lists. She referred to them in testimony in code as "Senator 73" or "Senator 8" and so on.

She testified in a lawsuit by the citizens group Common Cause, which is asking a three-judge federal court to order an end to taxpayer-financed mass mailings by Senate and House members.

The group contends that such mass mailings of newsletters, questionnaires, congratulatory messages and free government publications are largely intended to get votes and not to serve any legitimate official purpose.

The court has ordered Senate and House employees to produce statistical information about the use of the free mailing privileges, but with the names of senators and congressmen protected by a code to avoid embarrassing them. Subpoenas were issued late last week to the top aides of each of the 100 U.S. senators. Common Cause lawyer Kenneth Guido is seeking the keys with which to decipher the special-interest mailing list kept by many senators on the Senate computer.

In a recent court hearing, Guido used the case of "Senator 73" to illustrate for the judges the kind of information he is seeking.

He said Miss Baker's testimony showed that the senator used the computer to keep 50 lists of past or potential campaign donors, campaign volunteers, Republican Party club members and even persons who had received government jobs with the senator's help.

But the same senator had only six lists of constituents interested in legislative issues.

"So that what you find in terms of communicating with constituents on any issue, you have only six categories. You have approximately 50 which appear to me to be politically oriented," Guido said.

He is seeking information, now a closely kept secret, on how much taxpayer-financed mail each member of Congress sends to special-interest groups.

"Senator 73's" mailing lists included breakdowns of registered voters by party, enabling him to select only Democrats or only Republicans or even American Independent Party members to receive a certain tax-paid mailing.

Miss Baker's testimony, filed with the court late last year but until now unreported, contained other examples.

"Senator 8" sent three different "Dear fellow pilot" letters at taxpayer expense to a list of licensed fliers in his state obtained from the Federal Aviation Administration.

The same senator also sent taxpayer-financed letters about the consumer Product Safety Commission to a list of accountants and a letter critical of the minimum-wage law to a list of members of the National Federation of Independent Businessmen.

While on the public payroll in 1973 and 1974 Miss Baker assisted a number of senators in assembling mailing lists, including even names of registered Washington lobbyists.

"When I go after lists, I just go after as many special-interest lists as I can go after," she testified.

Her clients were not always successful. She said of one, "He is no longer a senator ... I guess it didn't work."

The client was identified only as "Senator 44."

The court record shows Miss Baker testified about the lists only after a lengthy legal battle. When first subpoenaed last year she pulled a number of documents from her file with the help of a lawyer who once worked for Tower.

She refused to turn over the material until the court threatened to hold her in contempt. She then testified that the documents had been transferred to Sen. Tower's office. Miss Baker now has a different lawyer.

At one point in the testimony Guido asked about the two-letter codes Miss Baker used to identify various lists of party officials and campaign donors kept on the computer by one of her bosses.

Q: "There was a list FC and entitled 'Fat Cats.' Where did you acquire that list?"

A: "That was acquired before I got there, prior to 1973 ... It had 30 (names) on there and I didn't care. I just kept it on for the heck of it."

'Think tank' for Congress set up

From Our National Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Institute for Congress, a congressional "think tank" estimated to cost $22.5 million over five years with much of the money coming from Congress, has quietly been established here.

The commission is headed by a 10-term former congresswoman and a Washington lobbyist, who is using the skills he learned in government to fight some of the regulations he helped create.

The institute describes itself as "a nonpartisan research organization devoted exclusively to providing both houses of Congress with timely and independent policy analysis of major policy issues confronting the United States." It is expected to employ a staff of 80.

The Congress already has individual staffs, committee staffs, the Library of Congress, the Congressional Research Service and the General Accounting Office to provide research, information and evaluation.

The institute's chairwomen is former Rep. Martha W. Griffiths, who practices law in Michigan as well as serving on the Chrysler Corp. board.

The vice chairman is William Ruckelshaus, first administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency former acting director of the FBI and former U.S. deputy attorney general.

Ruckelshaus is now a Washington lobbyist and lawyer. A number of his clients are the industries he attempted to regulate as head of the EPA, and a number of his cases involve EPA regulations.

The purpose of the institute is to provide Congress with original thought.

Politics VA hospital hearing

By BOB HOUSER Political Editor

Rep. Mark W. Hannaford, D-Long Beach and West Orange County, announced Saturday that the House Veterans Affairs subcommittee on hospitals will conduct a hearing from 9:30 a.m. to noon Friday at Long Beach Veterans Administration Hospital, focusing on the quality of patient care in VA hospitals.

Hannaford and Rep. David Satterfield, D-Va., will chair the hearing. Scheduled to testify are representatives from Southland veterans' organizations and VA hospital physicians and administrators. The congressmen will make a brief inspection of the hospital after the hearing.

In another matter, Hannaford testified Thursday before the House subcommittee on Social Security, calling for reform of the system to insure that senior citizens will not lose their benefits if they choose to work in a part-time job after retirement.

Hannaford has written legislation to increase the earnings limitation for Social Security recipients from $2,760 to $3,600.

"My major concern," said Hannaford, "relates to the injustice and considerable social consequences of limiting the opportunity of Social Security recipients to work for wages."

He also urged the subcommittee to adopt legislation permitting recipients to remarry without being threatened with a reduction in benefits.

Deuk vs. Kunstler

State Sen. George Deukmejian, R-Long Beach, has appealed to the California State Bar to repudiate recent remarks attributed to attorney William M. Kunstler, to wit: "I don't disagree with murder sometimes, especially political assassinations."

Deukmejian also asked the California Conference of Judges to demand an explanation from Kunstler and, if that explanation is unsatisfactory, to intervene to prevent his association with any future California court cases.

Labeling Kunstler's reputed remarks as "reckless and barbaric," Deukmejian said, "Surely legal ethics will not support such public statements which reflect detrimentally on the legal profession in the nation."

GOP women

Mrs. Arlene Solomon, of the Bicentennial Speakers Bureau, will speak at the Wednesday noon luncheon meeting of the Long Beach Council of Republican Women Federated in the Lafayette Hotel Embassy Room.

After her talk Mrs. Solomon will answer questions about Long Beach's celebration of the Bicentennial. The meeting is open to the public.

Frontier Demos

Long Beach City Councilman Wallace Edgerton will speak at the 11 a.m. Friday luncheon meeting of the New Frontier Democratic Club in the Reed Williams Restaurant.

The club will also elect new officers.

Hayden event

Mike Farrell, a costar of the MASH television series, will speak at a reception for Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Tom Hayden at 8 p.m. Friday in the residence of Norman and Beverly Gottlieb, 4325 Pepperwood Ave., Long Beach.

Also scheduled to appear are Hayden's wife, actress Jane Fonda, and her father, actor Henry Fonda.

The $5-per-person donation reception is sponsored by the Long Beach Committee for Hayden. Information is available at 434-3210.

Seal Beach LWV

Dennis Courtemarche, Seal Beach city manager, and Dr. Gordon Shanks, chairman of the city's Project Area Committee, will speak to the Seal Beach unit of the League of Women Voters at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in the Mariners Savings Community Room, 13820 Seal Beach Blvd., Seal Beach.

Members were asked to bring sack lunches for an action workshop scheduled to run until 1:30 p.m.

Ford aides think job rate will surpass predictions

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — One month doesn't tell the tale, but administration economists believe the employment situation may be much better this year than predicted.

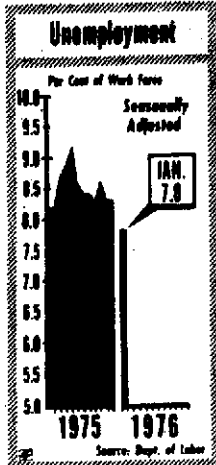

If it is, it could be a great help to President Ford's campaign.

The January employment report, which came out Friday, showed a one-month drop in the jobless rate from 8.3 to 7.8 per cent, which was much better than anyone in the administration had predicted.

And it was no fluke, top administration economists said.

"Frankly, I think the report was just phenomenal. It has greatly surpassed my expectations," said Burton G. Malkiel, member of Ford's Council of Economic Advisers.

He said it shows that "we have been correct in our thinking that we've

JOBLESS rate dropped from 8.3 to 7.8 per cent in January for largest monthly decline in 16 years. —AP Wirephoto got a very good recovery going. "Another gain in employment such as this could very well indicate we've been too pessimistic," Malkiel said in an interview. But he added he would want to wait another month "before saying that."

Sidney L. Jones, assistant treasury secretary for economic affairs, said in a separate interview that a number of administration economists believe that unemployment will be better than forecast this year.

The administration has been predicting an average unemployment rate for the year of 7.7 per cent, with a drop to about 7.3 per cent by the end of the year.

It is not as easy to get to 7.3 per cent as it might look, however, since additions to the labor force, including previously discouraged workers who had dropped out, could outnumber the new jobs created in months ahead. But Malkiel said unemployment is bound to get better. "I think it will drop further," he said.

The January statistics showed solid employment growth of the kind that the administration has been hoping for. Most of the gains were in manufacturing, including the auto industry, and most of those who found jobs were workers who had been laid off previously.

The jobless rate for blue-collar workers declined to 9.4 per cent in January from 10.7 per cent in December.

The gains probably will serve to quiet some critics of Ford's employment policies, at least temporarily. Until the January report, even some Republicans in Congress, such as Sen. Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., were predicting that Ford would be in trouble at the polls in November if greater progress was not made in employment.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., an ardent Ford critic, said he was pleased because "the hole in the doughnut got smaller and the doughnut itself got bigger, so that we'll all have more to eat."

Not everything is improved. Den-Hunt Humphrey, Sen. Minn., said Friday he is still concerned over the 13 per cent jobless rate for blacks and 19 per cent rate for teenagers.

He also said gains in auto employment may be only temporary because of possible stockpiling of autos by makers in advance of wage talks next summer.

Nevertheless, Jones said there is a good chance of better progress against unemployment in 1976 than predicted.

In 1975 it did not happen that way. The administration predicted an average unemployment rate of 8.1 per cent, but it turned out to be 8.7 per cent.

By contrast, progress was better on inflation in 1975. Instead of an 11.3 per cent increase in the Consumer Price Index, on the average, the increase was 9.1 per cent.

Jones said the inflation forecast for 1976 of an average 6.3 per cent probably would prove close to accurate.

500 domestic auto dealers folded in '75

DETROIT (AP) — More than 500 domestic new-car dealerships went out of business during recession-plagued 1975, the steepest drop in five years and the 20th year in a row that the number of auto outlets has declined.

According to an annual survey by the trade journal Automotive News, the number of dealers franchised with U.S. auto companies fell by 527 during last year to a modern-day low of 24,453. The last time more dealerships disappeared in a single year was in 1970, when there was a drop of 945.

The latest count is down to about half the number of dealerships around just after World War II and compares with 41,000 that were doing business in 1956, when the steady decline began.

Industry analysts attribute the sharp drop last year to the severe recession that crippled auto sales. By contrast, 369 outlets folded in 1974, when the industry was depressed by concerns over fuel shortages, and only 92 disappeared in the record sales year of 1973.

The 20-year decline in the number of dealerships has been attributed to the demise of all but four auto manufacturers, increased competitive pressures in obtaining franchises and the huge investments now required to operate a new-car outlet.

According to the Auto News survey, Chrysler Corp. dealers accounted for more than half the total decline in 1975, with a loss of 303. That gave Chrysler — which suffered the industry's biggest sales decline last year — 4,839 dealers at the start of 1976, compared with 5,142 the year before.

General Motors lost 110 dealers, leaving the auto giant with 11,750. Ford Motor Co. started the year with 6,641 outlets, a decline of 65, and American Motors began 1976 with 1,813 dealerships, a loss of 49.

Auto News pointed out that the biggest decline occurred during the first quarter of the year and eased with each successive three-month period — an indication of the industry's slow recovery from its worst slump in four decades.

There were 213 failures in the first quarter, 155 in the second, 101 in the third and 58 in the fourth.

GM chief foresees no UAW strike this year

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The chairman of General Motors expressed confidence Saturday that the car maker and the United Auto Workers could agree on an equitable labor contract this fall without a strike.

In remarks far more conciliatory than other recent speeches on forthcoming contract talks covering 750,000 auto workers, Thomas A. Murphy praised UAW leaders for their "intelligence and far-sightedness."

"If our evaluation in this regard is accurate — and we believe it is — then should we not be confident that an equitable settlement, without any shutdown, will be achieved in 1976?" said Murphy. "And that is what we will strive for — no more, no less."

"It should be clear to everyone that an equitable outcome achieved without any stoppage of production is in the best interest of everyone."

He added that the severe sales slump, plant

THOMAS A. MURPHY

shutdowns and layoffs during the past two years have given the industry "only too recent an experience with the hardships, both personal and economic, that are brought on by a disruption of production."

Murphy urged the UAW to pursue a settlement that provides improvements in line with increases in national productivity.

"Only in this way, by the closer balance of increased compensation with increased productivity, can American industry remain competitive," he said, "not only in our dealings in overseas markets but in resisting the incursions of foreign products into the markets here at home."

Murphy's remarks came in a keynote address at the annual convention of the National Automobile Dealers Association, which opened Friday night and runs through Wednesday.

Current three-year contracts between the four major car makers and the UAW expire in September.

The union, which likely will push for more job security, a reduced work week and improved layoff benefits as top priorities, has warned the companies not to use the economy as an excuse for denying workers contract improvements at the bargaining table.

It hopes the UAW, while trying to avoid a strike, also has warned that it is prepared for one if necessary, despite a two-year auto slump that has led to the layoff of thousands of workers.

In recent months, Murphy — in uncharacteristically harsh language — has criticized UAW proposals for a shorter work week as unproductive and unfeasible.

He said Saturday that UAW members among the best industrial workers in the world and have been protected against inflation because of cost-of-living clauses in their contracts.

But he added that the high labor costs have burdened the auto companies and contributed in part to higher new-car prices.

'Secret' low-rate loans told

NEW YORK TIMES Service
NEW YORK — A discounted prime lending rate, known as the "super-prime," has appeared in the nation's banking system because of slack demand for commercial loans and the fairly wide profit margins currently in effect on bank credit.

Bankers and money-market analysts report that some banks are trying to attract business competitively by charging a quarter or half point less than the posted prime rate on loans to the biggest and most credit-worthy corporate borrowers.

Great secrecy surrounds the practice, reflecting the reluctance of banks to have their prime customers know that other prime customers are being given preferential treatment. The borrowers benefiting from the practice also refuse to discuss it, fearing they may lose their rate advantage.

"They've got to deny it," said A. Gary Shilling, an economist for White, Weld & Company, "but I know of about half-a-dozen that are in this category. These are major banks, not small country banks."

"We don't have a super-prime rate here," said John F. McGillicuddy, president of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., "but we have heard of some out-of-town banks that have offered loans foregoing the normal considerations, and we have heard of some offers below the prime."

Shares in brokerages seen as a good buy for investors

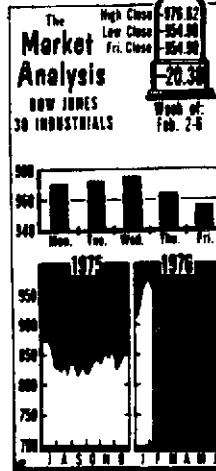

By LEONARD WIENER
Knight News Service

A booming stock market has meant more than just gains in the Dow Jones industrial average and a securities industry trying to handle heavy trading volume.

It also has meant a lot of profitable business for stock brokers, who already were enjoying a turnaround from hard times before the latest trading surge began this year.

Many large brokerages are publicly owned, and the trend of their own shares in recent weeks has been sharply upward. In fact, an investor could have done better buying stock-broker shares rather than other shares brokers were trading for their customers.

The Money Manager, a financial weekly, tracks the market performance of 13 stock brokerage firms, and its index for the week ending last Tuesday shows an overall gain of 65 per cent this year. The index is almost twice what it was a year ago.

The Dow Jones industrial average in the comparable period this year rose 15 per cent and was up 39 per cent from a year ago. The New York Stock Exchange Index did roughly the same.

Stock prices fell last Thursday and Friday, reflecting profit-taking and concern over rising interest rates.

The gains by brokerage-firm stocks follows earnings gains. A New York Stock Exchange survey of more than 400 member firms found a combined profit of $396 million for the first 11 months of 1975, compared with a $75 million loss in the period a year earlier.

More currently, Merrill Lynch & Co. reported a 52 per cent jump in fourth-quarter profits and a 155 per cent gain in full-year profits. The dividend was boosted by a third. Profits rose 196 per cent in the fiscal second quarter at Shearson Hayden Stone, 9 per cent in the fourth quarter and 253 per cent for the year at E. F. Hutton and 5 per cent in the fourth quarter and 179 per cent for the year at Reynolds Securities.

The surge this year in the value of stock-brokerage shares parallels an increase in average daily trading volume at the New York Stock Exchange from less than 19 million shares during December to more than 30 million shares so far this year.

Thomas S. Hyland Jr., editor-in-chief at Standard & Poor's Corp., explains that "brokerage earnings are a function of market volume and, theoretically at least, the higher the volume the higher the profits should be."

One reason S. & P. doesn't forecast brokerage firm earnings is because that means trying to forecast highly volatile stock-market volume, he said.

The heavy trading this year, along with healthy volume last year, has eased the impact on brokerage firms of negotiated commission rates, observers also note.

While there is no indication yet that heavy trading this year is overburdening Wall Street, late hours and weekend work have been necessary.

The latest runup in brokerage stocks has not erased some earlier losses, and the Money Manager index is still 20 per cent below its base level at the end of 1971.

The Dow average is up 10 per cent from that point.

Despite investor interest, brokers don't do much analysis of brokerage stocks — it's too much like self-analysis, said one outside analyst.

Gas-line use for oil feared

Associated Press

The chairman of the State's Air Resources Board warned Saturday that an oil-company plan for using a natural-gas pipeline to ship Alaskan oil east from California could cause gas shortages in the state.

Conversion of the El Paso Natural Gas Co. line — which brings natural gas to California from the Southwest — to an oil line could lead to business shutdowns and massive unemployment, said Tom Quinn.

Secret Witness summary, rewards

The Independent Press-Telegram's Secret Witness program has resulted in the arrest of 62 criminal suspects and fugitives from justice since the program was inaugurated on June 10, 1972, with rewards totaling $43,500 paid or committed on conviction of suspects waiting trial. Additional reward money available for informants is specified in the caselist below, one of the selected and varying summaries of 10 Secret Witness cases printed in the Independent and Press-Telegram each Sunday and Thursday.

Cases are dropped from the summaries from time to time, but rewards will remain in effect for these until such cases have been closed by police or until notification in print that reward offers have been withdrawn.

Rewards also will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspects in any other major criminal cases, whether covered in these summaries or not, and for the apprehension of fugitives from justice. These rewards will vary in amount depending on the seriousness of the offense.

To ensure eligibility for Secret Witness rewards, informants are required to channel all information directly through Secret Witness — that is, to notify Secret Witness first — either by calling the special Secret Witness telephone number or by writing in care of the Secret Witness post office box.

Today's summaries follow:

How to become a Secret Witness

Secret Witness seeks information from the public leading to the capture of fugitives and the arrest and conviction of criminals.

For this purpose a guaranteed fund of $100,000 has been established by the Independent, Press-Telegram to be used for rewards of varying amounts. Identities of informants will be kept secret.

You will be paid a reward if the information you give Secret Witness results in the arrest and conviction of a criminal or the capture of a fugitive in cases publicized in this column. Rewards also will be paid for information given to Secret Witness resulting in arrests and convictions, or the capture of fugitives, in cases not publicized in Secret Witness.

To contact Secret Witness, telephone 436-2526 from 8 a.m. to midnight on weekdays, or from 3 to 11 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. Do not give us your name. Or write to: Secret Witness, P.O. Box 67, Long Beach, Calif. 90801 (Secret Witness How-To, with box)

This is how the last page of your "Secret Witness" letter should look after you have typed or printed your information about a crime.

DO NOT SIGN YOUR NAME. Instead, select a code name for yourself. . . any name, as long as it's not your own. . . and place it and a code number at the bottom of your letter. The code number should combine three letters and three numbers in any combination.

Tear off and keep a corner of the last page, with the same code name and number on it. Mail your letter to "Secret Witness," P.O. Box 67, Long Beach, 90801.

Miranda doctrine said on way out

By AL EISELE
From Our National Bureau

WASHINGTON—When Ernesto Miranda died in a barroom brawl in Phoenix last week, he had no way of knowing that the landmark Supreme Court decision bearing his name also appeared to be dying.

Miranda's name was attached to one of the most controversial rulings of the court's Earl Warren era—the so-called "Miranda doctrine" that spelled out a suspect's right to remain silent in the face of police questioning.

Since the court handed down its historic ruling in 1966, law-enforcement officers have carried a "Miranda card" which they used to read to a suspect his constitutional rights before questioning him.

Miranda was carrying two of the cards when he was stabbed to death last week, and police used a "Miranda card" to inform a Mexican immigrant of his rights before arresting him in connection with the slaying.

They may not have to do that much longer if the current Supreme Court headed by Chief Justice Warren Burger continues to redefine the Miranda doctrine.

Just last month, for example, the Burger court hinted that the Miranda ruling may hamper the effectiveness of police and law-enforcement officers in carrying out their duties.

The high court ruled 6 to 2 in a Michigan case that the rights of a criminal suspect in custody are not violated by efforts of police to question him about a crime several hours after he has terminated an interrogation about a different crime by asserting his constitutional right to remain silent.

The opinion, written by Justice Potter Stewart, marked the fourth time in the past four years that a majority of the Burger court has narrowed the 1966 Miranda ruling.

This time, the court gave a narrow reading to a key sentence in the Miranda ruling with the practical result that police are now somewhat freer to carry on their interrogation of suspects.

Even though the ruling left Miranda substantially intact, two dissenting justices—William Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall—warned that the action was the forerunner of "the ultimate overruling of Miranda."

Only a week later, the court for the first time accepted a direct challenge to the Miranda ruling.

The court agreed to review a murder case in Iowa in which the defendant's murder conviction was reversed on appeal on grounds that he had been denied rights guaranteed under the Miranda doctrine.

Iowa's attorney general had asked the court to review the case and suggested that it consider, among other things, whether more "flexible" police interrogation standards should be adopted to replace those set by the Miranda ruling.

Beautification pacts

Two contracts for beautification projects, one on the Nature Center island in El Dorado Park East and the other a center-avenue project on Atherton Street, have been awarded by the Long Beach City Council.

The award for the Nature Center project was made to Moulder Brothers of Glendale in the amount of $49,837, while a $37,959 contract was awarded to Aldo's Landscaping Co., 1204 Temple Ave., to beautify Atherton between Palo Verde Avenue and Studebaker Road.

Included in the Nature Center work will be construction of walks and pavement, placing decorative rock at various locations, construction of a decorative rock wall and a redwood fence, installation of lighting and an irrigation system and planting.

The Atherton Street project will complete an improvement that started with road resurfacing and construction of median islands under a prior contract. The new contract will include installation of irrigation systems and planting of trees, shrubs and ground cover.

IP-T GRAND PRIX RACE GAME RULES — READ CAREFULLY

SAVE THESE RULES FOR HANDY REFERENCE THROUGHOUT THE CONTEST

1. The contest will consist of 13 weekly games beginning Sunday, January 4, 1976. Participants will be required to determine the finishing order of ten race cars. Official entry blanks will be published on successive Sundays for each week's contest.

Each Sunday, contestants will be given the names and numbers of 30 race cars, plus an entry form. Then, on Monday thru Friday, puzzles will appear in these newspapers which, when solved, will show which cars finished in the first thru tenth place.

TO SOLVE THE PUZZLES: Each day, Monday thru Friday, two puzzles will indicate the finishing place of two race cars, the number of letters in the cars' names, plus the correct positioning of at least one letter in each name (e.g. — — — 1 — —). From the list of 30 cars, entrants must then properly determine the car's name that fits that particular blank. On any given day, more than one car name may fit a puzzle, but when all ten puzzles for the week are completed, there will be only one proper solution. It may be necessary at times to have the entire set of ten puzzles before the winning solution is apparent. No car's name will be used more than once in each set of weekly puzzles.

When all ten puzzles are completed, only one solution will give you the correct finishing order of the ten cars. Entrants will then place the correct car number on the cars shown on the entry form, to indicate which car finished first, second, and so on through 10th place.

2. HOW TO ENTER: Mail your completed race entry form, neatly trimmed, to: Independent Press-Telegram, Grand Prix Race Game, P.O. Box 420, Long Beach, CA 90801 or hand deliver your entry form, enclosed in an envelope, to the Independent Press-Telegram main offices at 604 Pine Ave., Long Beach.

IMPORTANT: Across the end of the envelope, you MUST indicate the race number you are entering as shown in the sample to the right.

Each race course entry form will show the weekly contest deadline. All entries must be in the possession of the Independent Press-Telegram on or before that date. The Independent Press-Telegram cannot be held responsible for entries delayed or lost in the mails.

Individual contestants are limited to one entry per week. Only one entry may be enclosed in an envelope.

Do not mail in the Monday thru Friday puzzles. Only mail the Sunday race entry form.

It is not necessary to subscribe to or buy the Independent Press-Telegram to enter. Contestants may make hand-drawn copies of the official race entry form to enter. These must be legible and of the same size and style as those appearing in the newspapers. Entry forms reproduced by any mechanical or photographic means will not be accepted.

3. PRIZES: Weekly Cash Awards: The Independent Press-Telegram will award twelve cash prizes of $50.00 each week. The twelve weekly cash winners will be drawn at random from the total number of correct entries received for that week's contest.

Grand Prize: The Grand Prize winner will receive a Royal Viking 14-day Alaska/Canada cruise for two aboard the Royal Viking Sea, commencing June 14, 1976. The Grand Prize drawing will be held the week following the close of the weekly contests.

All weekly winners become eligible for the Grand Prize Drawing. In addition to all weekly winners, an additional 200 correct entries will be drawn from each week's contest to be included in the Grand Prize Drawing. No notification will be made of those drawn.

No substitute prizes will be awarded. Applicable federal, state, and other taxes imposed on any prize will be the sole responsibility of the prize winner.

All prize winners will be contacted by mail. When weekly cash winners' names are published in these newspapers, they will appear on the Wednesday following each contest deadline.

4. WHO MAY ENTER: The contest is open to anyone 18 years of age or older, except employees of the Independent Press-Telegram and members of their immediate families; employees of Knight-Ridder Newspapers, Inc., any of its affiliated companies and members of their immediate families; and Independent Press-Telegram distributors, and members of their immediate families.

5. JUDGING: The decisions of the contest judges will be final in all cases. Upon entering the contest, entrants agree to abide by all rules set forth here. Entrants not conforming to all rules shall be automatically disqualified.

6. The Independent Press-Telegram reserves the right to alter the contest rules or discontinue the contest at any time.

7. NO TELEPHONE INFORMATION REGARDING THE PUZZLES WILL BE GIVEN.

TRY THIS SAMPLE PUZZLE OF THE IP-T GRAND PRIX RACE GAME

From the list of car names, determine which name fits each blank. While more than one name may appear to fit some blanks, when completed there is only one possible solution. Each name can only be used once. Not all car names will be used.

95 TIGER	O	2nd place
23 DOVE	V	3rd place
14 RAVEN	D	4th place
77 BOLD

Once you've determined which car finished in which place, all you must do is transfer that car's number to the entry form from the previous Sunday. The correct answers for this sample would be: 1st, Car # 34; 2nd place, Car # 23; 3rd place, Car # 14; 4th place, Car # 77.

Since, EAGLE, car # 34, was first place finisher, place a 34 in the white space of the first place car.

HOW TO ADDRESS YOUR ENTRY

Your entry must be in the possession of the Independent Press-Telegram no later than the deadline shown on the entry form. It must be enclosed in an envelope addressed as the example below. YOU MUST INDICATE WHICH RACE # YOU ARE ENTERING ON THE OUTSIDE OF THE ENVELOPE.

Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra

'Offbeat' band just good fun

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

The stage looked like a second-period high school band classroom after all the choice instruments had been picked over by the kids in the first-period class.

Left behind were the instruments one would have second thoughts about.

No one ever asks you to play your tuba at parties, do they?

Undaunted, the women from The Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra scooped up the instruments and turned the rejects into a fanciful goodtime band.

"We do Scott Joplin-style ragtime," Paris Sleeze said. "And...we have fun at it."

Paris Sleeze (Terry Arnold), who "tickles the ivories," wanted to make it very clear that the six-woman "orchestra" is only an aside for the women in the band.

"We all have other jobs, so the band is our No. 2 priority. That's probably what's kept us together for 2½ years...we're all into other things and just do this for fun."

The Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra recently completed a sell-out gig at Long Beach City College. They're now planning their first road trip. "If we can find a truck, that is," added Sybil Rights (Carol Wood), the percussionist "drumming to the beat of a different tune."

"We've appeared at numerous benefits," she said.

"And we recently shared a stage with Lily Tomlin. I really hope we can find a truck," she said, nervously rapping her drum sticks on the side of a snare.

So who was this "Alice Stone" the band was named after?

"Alice Stone," clarinet player Clara Gnat (Miriam Cutler) admitted, "lived sometime during the late 1800s. We're can't be too exact because she moved around a lot."

"Alice decided when she was seven that she wanted to be a timpany player. She was thwarted at every turn by a domineering mother. So she did the only thing a would-be timpany player could do... she left home."

The rest is little known history.

Other members of the orchestra, which performs delightful parodies on the Pointer Sisters — the Pointless Sisters — and threatens to come out with a big "disco" hit at anytime, include Ms. B. Haven (Terri Carson), sliding and slipping on the trombone; Mauve Ellis (Carol-Lynn Fillet), featured on first, second and third violin; and Kell Drag (Liebe Gray), showcased on tuba.

Even if the band fails to get a truck to get to its Northern California debut, The Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra has struck a blow for ecology.

Liebe Gray's tuba was rescued from her grandmother's garden where it was being used as a planter.

They've also brought Southland audiences a lot of goodtime fun.

Legally, it can be a mess

Living together has woes

Knight News Service

NEW YORK—Actress Cybill Shepherd said, "Living together is so much sexier than getting married." Beverly Hills housemates Michael Douglas and Brenda Vaccaro claim, "When you're married, you try harder. Who needs that kind of pressure?"

Sexy and comfortable though it may well be, increasing numbers of couples (and their lawyers) are discovering that, at least legally, living together is a mess.

In all but a few states that recognize common-law marriage, there are no laws to protect free spirits without the $3 license. Beaten or abused by her mate, a woman can't get the speedy help of a court order of protection, as a legal wife can. And, when the bliss ends, couples are unable to get the benefit of the expertise of the family court and must settle the who-gets-what in the small claims courts like a pair of business partners. Children, of course, compound the problem.

With more and more unmarried couples living together, lawyers and judges are beginning to press for action. Shouldn't the law in some way recognize their special status? Isn't a relationship—which is in every way like a legal marriage—entitled to the rights of a marriage?

Take the case of Jane and Max Scherr. In 1960, when they met, she was a wide-eyed 20-year-old political science student at the University of California and he was 42 and the owner of a San Francisco bar, Steppenwolf, a leftist hangout. A year later, she became pregnant and Max left his wife of 32 years and their four children to live with her.

Jane soon adopted Max's name. In 1965, after the birth of their second child, they started publishing the Berkeley Barb in their home. They worked hard, and in a few years the underground paper was profitable.

Unhappiness followed

success and two years ago they split. Max wanted the Barb, the bank account and the house and turned his back on any responsibility to his daughters by Jane. (After all, he was still married and sending a check home to his wife all these 14 years. He said he even slept with her from time to time.) Jane took him to court.

Their court battle is still waging in the Alameda Superior Court, but Jane already has won child support and half of the equity on their house based on the 1971 Cary case decision in which a Northern California Appeals court established that "an actual family relationship"—with cohabitation, recognition of children and fulfillment of other duties of a marriage—was as valid as a marriage in determining the right to divide common property.

Affecting the outcome of this case, hundreds like it in the California courts and matrimonial law throughout the country is the pending California Supreme Court decision on the case of actor Lee Marvin and his live-in girlfriend of six years, Michele Troila. Miss Troila is suing Marvin for half of his assets, which she estimates at $1 million. A trial court said she was entitled to the half million; the appeals court said no; so the State Supreme Court will have to make the final decision.

NEW CALCULATOR GETS BIORHYTHM

Knight News Service

The alarm jolts you out of a sound slumber. You wipe the sleep from your eyes, turn off the clock, then reach for the calculator on the nightstand.

The calculator?

That's right—a 5-by-3-inch box which, after the proper computation, displays three sets of numbers that tell you where you were two years ago, where you are now, and where you will be in the future—physically, emotionally and intellectually.

The growing cult of biorhythm freaks—who believe that those three cyclical rhythms determine your ups and downs—now have a new toy: a pocket calculator which in seconds eliminates sifting through charts and graphs for the computation. It's called the biolator.

By determining the difference between the date in question (between 1901 and 1999) and subtracting your birthdate, a simple punch of the biolator key gives you the picture. A graph above the window helps you chart the results. It also tells you on what day of the week any day falls.

JS&A Sales in Northbrook, Ill., Chicago distributor of the biolator, which retails for $29.95, reports a booming business.

The manufacturers caution that biorhythm is "merely a theory based on statistics, and it does not always apply to everybody nor apply at all times."

Believers advise using it with caution and not

"fatalistically."

But, crystal ball or not, the biolator still is an eight-digit calculator with the usual arithmetic functions. It also can compute the number of days between two dates, useful for, say, someone calculating interest or promissory notes.

TWA pays $320,000 in crash case

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — Trans World Airlines has settled on a total of $320,000 in damages to the relatives of three passengers who died in the crash of a TWA jetliner near Upper-ville, Va., on Dec. 1, 1974.

All 92 persons aboard TWA flight 514 died when the plane slammed into the side of a Blue Ridge mountain during a heavy storm. A TWA spokesman Friday said 41 claims have been settled in that crash.

The terms of those settlements are being kept secret, either by TWA or by the U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Va., to discourage relatives or attorneys from trying to get equal or better cash awards.

However, the court orders in the settlements with three families signed last week by Fairfax County Circuit Court Judge Lewis D. Morris have been made public. They show TWA will pay $80,000 for the death of a 33-year-old FBI agent, $140,000 for the death of a retired Army brigadier general and $100,000 for the general's wife.

YOUR HOROSCOPE
by JEANE DIXON
Forecast for Monday

Aries (March 21-April 19): The most elementary routines take more time than usual. Complex mechanical procedures are best left to professionals. Try to form new alliances.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Other people are preoccupied with their own thoughts. Leave them alone. Check budgets and inventories. Develop positive ideas; revise current plans promptly.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): Use a direct approach. Ask for help from those who can give it. Be on the lookout for sought-after items, especially you travel to new places.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): Reorganize your workplace. You need a revitalization course and to settle into your regular job. If it's a new one, you must learn quickly.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): Be ready to deal with noisy questions and people who like to gossip. Keep track of expenses and related figures to prevent embarrassment or misadventure.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Close out previously started projects or reassemble them into more efficient groups. Clear the way for larger operations. Evening promises interesting introductions.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have to move on the basis of estimates and untried methods. You have plenty of company, but no one says very much. Common sense pulls you through.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Analyze the situation, then check with an older hand to see what he thinks of your suggested solution. Adopt proposals of subordinates.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Much depends upon your initiative, ability to communicate and understanding of your role and that of others. Try to say little and do a lot.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Practice patience as everyone else goes in circles. Those nearby are curious and insist on nothing less than the full story.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If you don't share secrets, your knowledge taken on tremendous importance in others' minds. Ignore wishful thinking and follow wisdom, rather than whim.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): It's easier to swap something than to sell it. Decide how you'll dispose of the trade before you accept it. Clear your calendar of pending business.

Janis Ian all business

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

Janis Ian writes songs with tenuous fibers of truth. Her bittersweet compositions, "At Seventeen" — "To Those of us who knew the gain of Valentines that never came" — provided the overtones and moody quality to her opening night concert at the Box in Hollywood Thursday.

Seemingly nervous and almost ill at ease on stage, it was all business for Ms.

Ian. She leaves no room for doubt about who she is. Her songs reflect her own life-style. Her lyrics are made of the stuff that sends shivers down your neck.

The words are as much an intensive and personal look into Janis Ian as they are into members of her audience.

Most of us can identify with "Valentines that never came" and with the pain of growing up questioning society's values.

It was just such a search that launched Janis Ian on her career in 1964 with a fluke hit, "Society's Child."

Her current lyrics smack of sadness and individual experiences of pain. They're not "fun" to listen to and they're not disco music.

'Exquisite' in 'Gravity' Hepburn a 'gutsy lady'

By SHIRLEY EDER
Knight News Service

NEW YORK—Katharine Hepburn not only transcends the confusing story and dialog given her in "A Matter of Gravity," but she also gives one of the most exquisite performances of her stage career. What's more, she is a very gutsy lady.

I don't know another important female name in show business who could have kept "A Matter of Gravity," by Enid Bagnold, open on Broadway after the first couple of weeks. My bet is that Miss Hepburn will make it a box office hit and keep it going for as long as she wants to perform in it. From the beginning she has said she'd do it for only a limited run.

Opening night brought out a lot of notables. Among them were Joan Fontaine, Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn. Hume now has a small beard. When I asked if he had grown it for a new part, Jessica replied, "No, he grew it for me, because I love Hume with a beard."

Ellen Burstyn and Carol Channing stood and cheered Miss Hepburn along with all of us in that jam-packed theater on opening night. After about the sixth curtain call, Miss Hepburn stepped forward to praise Enid Bagnold and Noel Willman, the director. I whispered to David Merrick sitting in the next seat that it would be more fitting for the author and the director to render a "thank you" speech to Miss Hepburn. Merrick, whom I secretly call "Mr. Mustache," agreed.

SHIRLEBRITIES: Katharine Hepburn is a fresh air fiend. Anyone who has worked with her on a stage knows this. Most of the cast with her in the musical "Coco"

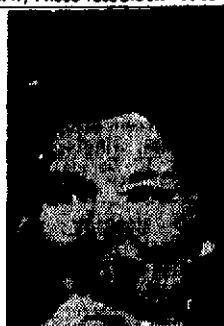

nearly froze to death the winter she played it on Broadway. She insisted the stage door and exits be left open during performances.

Well, sir, for this new play Kate will have her very own air. The dressing rooms backstage in most New York theaters are windowless. Actors, over the years, have objected, but to no avail. The heartless theater owners turn deaf ears to anything that means money out of pocket.

Surely Kate Hepburn must be the most bankable star in the legit theater. Why do I say that? Because the Shubert organization, which is not known as the last of the big spenders among theatrical landlords, not only had a window installed in Miss Hepburn's dressing room, but also had to break through a brick wall so that it would open to the outside.

PRATTLE-TATTLE: Sardi's was so crowded after the Hepburn opening that Vincent Sardi called other restaurants to reserve tables for his overflow. Ellen Burstyn said at Sardi's her next picture will be called "Providence." She said Dirk Bogard and John Gleason would also star in it.

WITNESS THE GREATEST NAVAL ENCOUNTER SINCE 1975

THE PLACIDITY BEFORE THE PANIC.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL GREAT BUDWEISER® CANOE RACE.

HEAR THE PITTER-PATTER OF PLUNGING PADDLES.

Come witness the wetness as Budweiser presents the Fourth Annual Great Canoe Race at Busch Gardens.

For five days (February 12-16), you'll be able to saturate yourself in what has come to be called the greatest condensation of contemporary culture.

Students from U.S.C., U.C.L.A., The University of Maryland and M.I.T. will paddle it out in a 72-hour marathon which will carry them through the hazardous and twisting waterways of an otherwise placid Busch Gardens lagoon.

You'll witness strokes of genius in this heated contest of collegians as they attempt to paddle their way into the record books. For the record, U.S.C. covered 324 miles in this three-day marathon in 1973—averaging an incredible six knots. (This is not the speed they obtained, but the number of knots in their muscles.)

Thursday, February 12, from 10 till noon is Press Day. Star athletes from U.C.L.A. and U.S.C. will race with sports-writers to warm up for the following day's great race.

Opening splash is at noon on Friday the 13th. Bud Man will be there to start the race with his trusty water gun, along with the U.C.L.A. pep band. The race will continue into St. Valentine's Day (the park will open its heart by staying open till 9), and will end at noon on Monday, Washington's Birthday (and, we might add, a well-timed salute to his crossing the Delaware).

As soon as the winners are fished out of the water, Bud Man will have the dubious distinction of presenting them with the coveted Walter Q. Piddling Paddle Award.

On top of all this excitement, the Budweiser Hot-Air Balloon will be flying above throughout the entire spectacle.

BUSCH GARDENS
LOS ANGELES
Take San Diego Freeway, Roscoe Blvd. exit.

DIFFERENT STROKES FOR DIFFERENT FOLKS.

Of course, you can always drown yourself in all the regular rides and attractions at Busch Gardens. This year the theme of the park is "The Good Old Days," the focus of which is the re-creation of Old St. Louis, featuring plenty of good old-fashioned amusement. It's a perfect way to celebrate our great country's Bicentennial.

There are some new added attractions for this special five-day weekend, too. Fine antique roadsters will be on display. Roto (a three-ring circus of comedy, music, and brass) will be there. Plus a roving quartet, a wandering banjo player and a ragtime piano player, all to lighten the heart.

And, to make sure you have plenty of energy to enjoy all this fun and excitement, Busch Gardens offers plenty of refreshments, including honey-dipped fried chicken with steak-size french fries. Giant hoogie sandwiches. Or beer-basted ribs. All to revitalize your body.

General admission is $4.75 ($4.25 with college I.D.) for adults. $3.75 for children 4-11. Children under 4, free. Should you want to spend two days at Busch Gardens without having to spend the money for two tickets, we're offering a special two-day T-Shirt Ticket for $7.00 which can either be worn or shown at the gate.

So come and enjoy this great amphibian amphitheatre of events at Busch Gardens.

Views differ on role of money in education

By BOB ANDREW
Staff Writer

How important is money to your child's education?

A Los Angeles teachers' union and a school-district official drew somewhat different conclusions from statistics published in the union newspaper.

United Teacher, the official organ of the United Teachers of Los Angeles (UTLA), ranked all 436 elementary schools in the Los Angeles system according to the poverty level of their students and matched this list with reading and math test scores for each school.

The overwhelming impact of money on achievement," the article said. "If a child is in an affluent home, he comes to school with a much better chance of being ready to learn. The poorer the household, the less the chance of readiness to learn."

But Dr. John Wright, director of research and evaluation for the Los Angeles Unified School District, doesn't entirely agree.

"Money itself doesn't matter so much, but what you do with it and the conditions surrounding money," he said recently. He believes a child from a wealthy home can be poorer educationally than one from an inner-city ghetto.

Wright said the statistics are not normally kept in the form printed by UTLA. Instead the UTLA article mixes data normally compiled separately for divergent purposes.

"All we did is push the right buttons on the computer when they asked us for the information," Wright said.

The poverty indicator is the order in which schools are ranked for eligibility for federal "Title I" funds intended to help equalize educational opportunity for all youngsters regardless of their backgrounds.

It is based on four factors: average annual income of families living within the school's attendance boundaries (which is also listed as a separate column entry) as shown in the 1970 census; the number of families receiving assistance under the AFDC (aid to families with dependent children) program; the number of children who qualify for the free breakfast program, and the educational level of the youngsters' parents.

The columns headed "Reading" and "Math" are the 1975 percentile ranking of sixth-graders at the school on national standardized tests in those subjects.

"We (the district) don't make any attempt to relate the test scores to the Title I ranking," Wright said. "It just tells us which schools will be the last to be cut off in the event of a cutback in Title I funds."

Regardless of how the district uses the data, the UTLA article observes that "As one reads the family income figures from poorer to richer schools, the rise in achievement scores in reading and math goes right along with the rise in income."

The article contends that "the one thing that a family has to offer a child is personal attention — the thing that a poor family is often unable to provide."

While Wright agrees that personal interest is a prime factor in educational development, he doesn't view it as the private stock of upper-income levels.

For instance, he said, the mother in a high-income home may be so involved in outside activities that she spends less time with her child than a poverty mother who must work long hours to provide for her family.

The UTLA article sees money as the supreme factor in a child's readiness to learn.

"There are a host of other factors influencing achievement," it acknowledges, "though none apparently as much as money. We are only vaguely aware of many of those other factors. For example, the number of generations a family has been middle class may be an important factor. The number of apartment dwellers may be another."

More important than money, in Wright's opinion, is the type of activity taking place in the home.

"A child who sees his parents reading — or who is read to — is going to develop faster than one who is allowed to spend all of his time with television," Wright said.

But such items as books and magazines need not be purchased so long as public facilities such as libraries and museums are well-used.

New Mattel doll will be X-rated toy Baby Brother not your average toy

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

It's show and tell time at Mattel.

They loved it in Cleveland. Raved about it in Detroit. Thought it was far out in Los Angeles. And they didn't ban it in Boston.

Baby Brother — the Mattel Toy Company's newest answer to realism — is scheduled to blitz toy stores in early April.

And if the opinions of the 800 people polled in the four test cities are correct, the American children are ready for an "anatomically correct" baby boy doll.

— Anatomically correct is just a fancy way of saying the dolls will have male genitals.

"It's just part of nature," said Tom Kalinske, director of product planning, design and marketing for the Hawthorne toy firm.

"The kids we've used as a test group to play with the doll (all toys are tested with volunteer children before being placed on the market) were not impressed with the doll's 'correctness.' They just played with it like they would any other doll."

Baby Brother is Kalinske's idea. His co-workers tease the shaggy-haired youthful marketing director by calling the doll "Kalinske's baby."

"I didn't really originate the idea," Kalinske said with a shy smile. "How can you originate something that began with nature?"

"Our marketing survey showed Americans are ready for a 'correct' boy doll and we just want to be the first on the market."

A similar doll was marketed by another toy company in 1967. It flopped.

Kalinske said Baby Brother has been on the drawing boards for about six weeks. Formal plans were drawn up in July and the doll is expected to be in toy stores by April.

Baby Brother is part of the "Tender Love" series of dolls. It will be available in both black and white, has no moving parts, wets when given a drink of water and will sell for about $13.

"Toys are a $4½-billion industry, with the average American child receiving about $60 worth of toys a year," Kalinske said. "Dolls account for 15 per cent of the toy market."

MATTEL'S TOM KALINSKE AND 'BABY BROTHER'

Baby Brother is aimed at children 2 to 6 years old.

Skipper, the doll that matures when you twist her arm (her waist slims and she develops breasts) was introduced about this time last year and, according to Kalinske, "one million kids had a Skipper doll by Christmas." They're hoping for the same success and acceptance for Baby Brother.

Chances of Barbie and Ken, two of Mattel's most famous doll personalities, becoming "anatomically correct" are "slim to none."

"It just wouldn't fit in the play pattern kids assign to dolls," Kalinske said, quickly dropping the matter.

No one at Mattel is applauding yet. The success and acceptance of Baby Brother won't be known until July.

Meanwhile, the tight web of security (it's harder to get into a toy factory than a defense plant) clings to the Mattel think tank.

Employees walk silently through the brightly painted halls with plastic identification cards pinned to their shirts.

The toy industry is very competitive. It costs about $100,000 to put a new doll on the market.

And that's not play money.

Liability insurance also problem in other fields

By MOLLY BURRELL
Staff Writer

"With many problems there are no solutions—only intelligent choices, and they require trade-offs."

—Dr. Roger Slater, 1976

"Medical malpractice liability is only one part of a major problem that affects everyone who drives a car, owns a home or a business, or is in municipal government: the increasing incidence of liability litigation."

"Insurance underwriters and bankers are predicting that public liability will be uninsurable within the next five to 10 years because it will be prohibitively expensive."

Long Beach neurosurgeon Dr. Roger Slater advanced this thesis this week after the end of the Southland doctors' slowdown and after six months of study of the problems in the malpractice-insurance issue.

He cites climbing liability insurance costs in the public sector to back his thesis and also explains what he feels are the reasons for the increased number of medical malpractice suits in recent years.

"In the last 20 years there is a firmer base for treatment than in the whole history of medicine because of the development of antibiotics, vaccines and new surgical techniques."

"There are also more malpractice cases filed than ever before. This is ironic and incongruous, and the reason is this: the unrealistic expectations, disappointments and frustrations that are embodied in litigation. And the motive for litigation is money."

"It's as though 'miracle drugs' and fantastic new methods of treatment should automatically ensure miracle recoveries," he says.

Add to this the fact that America is the only nation that allows contingency fees for attorneys handling malpractice suits (In England the loser pays all, and in Canada none are allowed.)

Nine out of ten malpractice suits are settled out of court, most for less than $20,000, he says. Of the 10 per cent that reach court, he cites statistics from Jury Verdicts magazine:

In 1973, 81 out of every 109 jury verdicts favored doctors; in 1974, 102 of every 149 were in their favor, and last year 74 of every 95 favored of them.

Expenses involved in a typical $30,000 jury malpractice verdict, according to the National Commission on Medical Liability Insurance, amount to $15,900 for attorneys (plaintiff and defense), $9,300 in insurance company costs (paper work, investigation, return on investment) and only $4,800 to the patient who really needs it. Under terms of the bill introduced by Assemblyman Barry Keene, D-Humboldt, an attorney gets $20,000 of a $50,000 judgment, $36,666 of a $100,000 judgment, $61,666 of a $200,000 judgment and $91,666 of a $500,000 judgment.

Slater assembled these among a welter of other statistics after he became chairman of the medical liability insurance action committee at Memorial Hospital Medical Center several months before the crisis came to a head in the Southland.

"I volunteered—a thing you should never do—and it's been a liberal education," he says. Since then he has made trips to Sacramento and elsewhere in the state testifying at hearings, conversing with legislators, researching and compiling information.

The more he studied, he said, the more he ran into people in other walks of life with the same story on the liability issue. "I have a friend who supplies heavy equipment for state freeway construction. His liability this year is $400,000. An acquaintance who owns a couple of service stations is paying $19,000. I hear that the unified school district liability has gone to $600,000 and that the city of Long Beach's liability insurance has risen dramatically."

People Talk

F.C. Anderson

RIP CHILDERS is in his late 20s. He lives in the central district of Long Beach, attends an automotive trade school and reports to a state parole officer who regards him as a good bet not to return to Soledad or any other prison.

In the vernacular, Rip Childers (not his real name) is making it. His head's on as straight as the path he walks on the outside of prison. He's a proud man; he doesn't ask any favors of the society that put him away for forgery. All he wants is the chance to prove himself.

Rip Childers has the physique of a light-heavyweight boxer, the hands of an artist and the soul of a poet. I think he can be a major poet, that society can be enriched by the muse Rip Childers found behind bars.

In company with Rip's parole officer, I read his poetry one afternoon in December. We were deeply impressed by the man the lines revealed. The poems dealt with the best uses of freedom; they sang of love, compassion, honest emotion free of syrup and cloying sentimentality; they depicted a man raising the sights of his hope one small click at a time.

The words expressed modest goals and were devoid of any trace of self-pity. In a sense, the poems were a diary of a man coming to terms with his past, his present and his future. Wisdom, like freedom, is a hard-bought thing—and Rip Childers had paid a heavy price for it.

I thought a lot about Rip Childers while on my vacation. When Soledad hove into view along Highway 101 I thought of the spirit of a man that had come through those walls long before he did. I knew that neither the spirit nor the man would ever go back inside.

As I reflected on a man named Rip Childers, I determined to do something for him. He needs a typewriter, and I'm scouting around for one to give to his parole officer for delivery to him. Rip's well worth the investment if I'm any judge of character and potential.

I can't think of any better way to start a new year than giving a man like Rip Childers a helping hand.

MAUDE Carder Servies, who lives in San Gabriel Valley and is 86 years old, is a reader after my own heart. It seems she and I have the same journalistic hero, Ernie Pyle.

Ernie, the best friend the G.I. ever had, was killed in the Pacific late in World War II. But his work is like an eternal flame, still shining out of the pages of anthologies, still human and real and warm to the spirit and the eye.

Mrs. Servies met Ernie in Indiana in 1920 when he was a cub reporter covering a church dedication for a local newspaper. She followed his career closely thereafter, and his columns had places of honor in her scrapbook.

I never met Ernie Pyle, a fellow Hoosier, but I did inherit his old typewriter when I was on the staff of the now-defunct Indianapolis Times. The paper was owned by Scripps-Howard, a publisher that never threw anything away—with the possible exception of reporters and deskmen crass enough to ask for a $3 raise.

Ernie's old high-rise Underwood served me well for four years, even though it was wont to chew up ribbons in short order. It was in the replacement of the ribbons that I truly became an ink-stained wretch.

While I was running through my trove of Ernie Pyle memories, Mrs. Benton Walker of Lakewood called with more material. A few days later she sent along a clipping from the July 1975 issue of the Hoosier Legionnaire, which told about the American Legion's plans to restore Ernie's Dana, Ind., home as a permanent state memorial.

THE PYLE birthplace is to become a state memorial through action of the Indiana General Assembly and will be registered as a National Historic Landmark.

Ernie's home was built in 1850 and has been vacant since 1963. For years it sat on a farm down the way from Dana, nearly inaccessible to all save vandals. Last autumn, however, the Legion moved the old house into Dana, where situated on a corner lot it can be repaired, maintained and protected by the townspeople Ernie Pyle loved and wrote about so often.

There was a time when Ernie was buried beneath a lonely monument on Le Shima, the godforsaken island where a sniper's bullet killed him on April 18, 1945. But he's nearer home now, his resting place Crater National Cemetery in Hawaii. As for his spit, I don't think it ever left Dana, no matter how far he roamed.

I came into newspapering by the light of Ernie Pyle's star, and I follow it still as best I can.

Will nuclear power debate get to real issue?

SACRAMENTO — Only about 120 days remain for California's voters to make up their minds about nuclear energy, and that means the tempo of the pro and con campaigns on Proposition 13 will be speeding up.

What a speeded-up tempo means, unfortunately, is a probable increase in the rhetoric, sloganeering and hurling of charges and counter-charges.

It might be appropriate, then, to take a look at what will appear on the ballot when voters go to the polls June 8.

The official summary will read as follows:

"After one year, would prohibit nuclear power plant construction and the operation of existing plants at more than 60 per cent of original licensed core power level unless federal liability limits are removed. After 5 years, would require the derating of existing plants by 10 per cent per year unless the legislature, by 2/3 vote, has confirmed the effectiveness of safety systems and waste disposal methods. Permit small-scale medical or experimental nuclear reactors."

The voter will have, beforehand, the complete language of the proposed law.

Bob Schmidt

plus arguments in its behalf by Harold Urey, Nobel laureate in physics and professor emeritus at the University of California, San Diego; John Knezevich, president of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1969, AFL-CIO; and Kent Gill, president of the Sierra Club.

Arguing against the measure in the ballot pamphlet will be Dr. Robert Hofstadter, Nobel laureate in physics, Stanford University; Dr. Ruth Yaffe, professor of chemistry, San Jose State University; and Dr. Jack Edward McKee, professor of environmental engineering at the California Institute of Technology.

In addition, the staff of the Assembly Committee on Resources, Land Use and Energy is preparing a summary of the 15 hearings it held on the initiative.

Voters will settle the question of which campaign was the most persuasive but at this point it appears that the intense amateurs promoting the initiative have given a pretty thorough public relations drubbing to the professionals representing the utilities, manufacturers, and federal agencies opposed to the measure.

As an example, practically everyone who talks about the proposed law, including many of its opponents, refers to it as the "Nuclear Safeguards Initiative." Its proper title is "Nuclear Power Plants Initiative."

It took awhile for the initiative's opponents to realize what had happened, but by that time the use of the substituted title had become general. The substitution was accomplished with a subtlety which appears to belie the initiative promoters' self-proclaimed lack of professionalism.

There will undoubtedly be considerably divided comment on last week's resignation by three General Electric executives and their warnings about nuclear energy, but the announcement was orchestrated with a public relations sophistication of undeniable quality.

So the initiative's opponents know by now that they have a major selling job to do. Their campaign seems to be developing along two lines.

One: The initiative is unconstitutional because the subject of nuclear safeguards has been pre-empted by the federal government.

Two: No nuclear energy means California's choices are between insufficient electricity and a dangerous reliance on dwindling and environmentally destructive fossil fuels.

Both lines may be valid, and one or both may decide the vote.

But it is to be hoped that the larger issue — nuclear energy itself — will be examined. The subject has never been examined in a public forum as large as the one provided by the initiative, and the opportunity should not be wasted.

Thirty years ago the federal government opted to pour billions and billions of taxpayers' dollars into the development of nuclear energy. That decision, and the related decision to ignore, for all practical purposes, the development of other energy sources such as solar or wind or tidal or geothermal or whatever, should be justified.

It is important, because if the initiative fails, either because of the vote or a court ruling, California's energy future will be determined by the government apparatus which made that original decision.

B-2 LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA, SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1976

Editorials

Welcome, neighbor

Both Norris Industries and a good many Long Beach people who worked hard to help the international industrial giant to locate its corporate headquarters in our city are entitled to congratulations.

Norris Industries has made the decision, purchased 4.3 acres in the West Beach Redevelopment Area, and will soon call Long Beach home.

NORRIS MANUFACTURES building, industrial, automotive and defense products in 28 plants throughout the world. The headquarters for these plants, which employ 10,000 persons, will be in a building that will go up in the next year or so at the southwest corner of Ocean Boulevard and Golden Shore.

Kenneth Norris Jr., the company's board chairman, said a year ago that the decision to move to Long Beach was made after a real estate company searched Southern California for a centrally located site close to other key commercial and financial institutions and with easy access to freeways and airports.

We're happy that Norris selected Long Beach. We trust the move will be good for the company and the 50 to 100 key people who will direct its operations from the Long Beach headquarters.

THE MOVE WILL be good for Long Beach, too, we think.

"This is an extremely significant industrial development in the history of Long Beach," Mayor Thomas J. Clark said at the ceremony in which Norris signed an agreement to pay $1.5 million for the building site.

The significance is not only in the presence of Norris Industries, which is important in itself, but also in the impetus it will give the search for other new industry for our city, and the impetus for expansion of existing Long Beach industries.

Norris Industries and other companies, large and small, that come to Long Beach will find this a friendly community with good schools and good government as well as one with obvious advantages in location and climate.

We look forward to having the Norris Industries people among us. And we trust that the Economic Development Corp., the non-profit company that worked to bring them here, will have more success stories soon.

Of minimal interest

The new thing in art, we gather from an article by dance critic Deborah Jowitt in New York's Village Voice, is minimalism.

The unsophisticated might call it monotony.

MRS. JOWITT'S main example is a dance by Kathy Duncan. As the dancer's husband, composer Tom Johnson, plays "deep, violent chords" on the piano, Miss Duncan "stands in a white silk dress with a bright light trained on her."

At some point — "maybe after 54 chords" — Miss Duncan falls. The piano stops. Miss Duncan gets up slowly. The chords resume. She stands for awhile. Then she falls again.

Senator Soaper

IN SPITE of the song, life probably was never just a bowl of cherries, but it would have been a lot simpler than worrying about roses, oranges, cotton, bluebonnets, fiestas and such.

FARM YOUNGSTERS are reminded they don't have to go to the big city to be a success at any profession, unless their goal is to be an urban guerrilla.

Occasionally, for variety perhaps, she "races to one corner, then tiptoes smoothly backward on the same diagonal, making odd little curving gestures close to her face."

Mrs. Jowitt said this solo — called "Outside" — is not quite in "the mainstream of minimalism" because it uses "recognizable dance motifs" rather than "everyday movement." Mrs. Jowitt apparently has not been reading the stories about President Ford.

"I keep wondering," the critic commented, "why this is more interesting to talk about and to think about than it was to watch."

IT IS THIS ability to be puzzled by what would be crystal clear to the average fellow that enables a critic to appreciate minimalism, we suppose.

Someday, we suspect, New Yorkers will tire even of talking and thinking about minimalism. If the new fad then becomes maximalism, all the critics can rush over to Madison Square Garden when Ringling Brothers sets up three rings and a bandstand.

Political coverage has flaws

MANCHESTER, N.H. — Eight years ago, at about the comparable stage of the 1968 presidential campaign, the candidacy of Sen. Eugene McCarthy was considered a poor joke by most of the political press.

Only in the last week or 10 days of the primary campaign in this state did the press catch on to the fact that the hordes

Tom Wicker

New York Times News Service

of young McCarthy volunteers were shaping a real challenge to President Johnson. And when McCarthy won 42 per cent of the vote here, the impact of his achievement was roughly doubled by the fact of the press's earlier neglect; a major upset appeared to have been scored, when all along the press had underestimated the strength of a campaign that could add antiwar fervor to anti-Johnson sentiment, and support both with ample manpower and a candidate on the scene.

THAT SAME year, George Romney of Michigan arrived in New Hampshire still the front runner for the Republican nomination despite a growing belief in the political press that he was inept, unable to handle tough questions and not of presidential calibre — whatever that is.

As the New Hampshire campaign progressed, press doubts about Romney mushroomed, and he slumped in the polls; before the votes were cast in this state he withdrew — unquestionably a victim, to a large extent, of the picture the press had painted of a dunce-cap candidate with his foot in his mouth.

What was the difference? Why did press disdain — and in some cases outright hostility — fail to destroy the McCarthy candidacy, while press disdain — and in some cases, open contempt — virtually ruined the Romney campaign?

THE ANSWER seems clear. The McCarthy effort was based on genuine popular support, for an idea and for a man who had had the courage to run against the odds. Press reaction could not outweigh that basic fact, but it could and did have profound effect on George Romney — who did, in many ways, fail the test of national campaigning and who had no fundamental support, independent of his performance, to carry him through.

The history of recent "media effects" ought to be borne in mind as the 1976 campaign moves along. The press — television most certainly included — inevitably reflects in its articles and broadcasts the perceptions (however arrived at) of the people who write and produce them. Their perceptions tend to be remarkably similar, since these men and women influence each other as well as the public; and these perceptions also can be wrong. Both the hard instinct and the universal human tendency to prepare for the last war are prime reasons; venality, bias and conspiracy usually are not.

Already the process can be seen at work this year:

— Jimmy Carter of Florida clearly has been promoted by the political press as the "surprise" of the campaign so far. Carter's "good press" may have helped this become a truth; but paradoxically, if he does not do as well in Florida as the press perception suggests he will do, his campaign could be badly damaged.

— The press has spread the idea that Fred Harris, with his radical economic program, can't win, even though he obviously has substantial support. This almost certainly hurts Harris; but if he should win or do well in the early primaries, he would be helped by the "upset" effect.

— Most reports on George Wallace, despite routine caveats about his health, see him as the smashing vote getter of 1968 and 1972, a perception yet to be substantiated in 1976.

And beware, readers and viewers, of any story low-rating a candidate for inept "press arrangements." Hell hath no fury like a reporter whose baggage has been left in Berlin, N.H., or anywhere else, for that matter. Even such minor concerns can influence the perceptions of political reporters. Press perceptions and their impact on public judgment, in fact, is a subject well worth other articles as the campaign unfolds.

"I'M BEGINNING TO SUSPECT AN ASSASSINATION PLOT..."

Bicentennial snake oil

SCRABBLE, VA. — The mail brings a letter and a handout from a public relations outfit in Philadelphia, promoting the Declaration of Interdependence recently composed by Professor Henry Steele Commager. The letter politely suggests that I might want to prepare a commentary on this thing.

Very well, I just might. The professor's pronouncement, prepared for the World Affairs Council, is a bucket of mush. It is a mish-mash of reality and illusion, of good intentions and bad judgment. The dictionary defines the verb "to subvert" as "to undermine the morals, allegiance, or faith of; to corrupt." This is a genuinely subversive document.

COMMAGER BORROWS from Jefferson's Declaration of Independence. It is a bad loan. As a historian, the professor doubtless has learned a vast deal of the world as it was; he manifests a pathetic naivete about the world as it is.

"When in the course of history, the threat of extinction confronts mankind, it is necessary for the people of the United States to declare their interdependence with the people of all nations. . . . Fiddlesticks. Catastrophe, yes; extinction, no. A little less hysteria might have provided a better beginning.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident," says the professor, "that all men are created equal." It is a palpable falsehood. The professor declares "that people everywhere are entitled to the blessings of life and liberty, peace and security and the realization of their full potential." Nonsense. How did people everywhere get so entitled? Who entitled them? The American tradition teaches us that people must work for these things, that nations preserve peace by constantly preparing for war, that realizing one's "full potential" is a personal struggle. It is not something to which one is "entitled."

THE PROFESSOR goes on to say that all the peoples and the nations of the globe should acknowledge their interdependence and free themselves from the "limitations of national prejudice." We must put aside "narrow notions of national sovereignty." We must rise above "the claims of chauvinistic nationalism."

"We affirm," says the professor, "that a world without law is a world without order, and we call upon all nations to strengthen and to sustain the United Nations and its specialized agencies, and other institutions of world order, and to broaden the jurisdiction of the World Court, that these may preside over a reign of law that will not only end wars but end as well that mindless violence which ter-rorizes our society even in times of peace."

Under the Declaration of Interdependence, the resources of Earth "are the heritage of no one nation or generation, but James J.

of all peoples, nations and posterity." The declaration demands a "more equitable" sharing of these resources. "No one nation can any longer effectively maintain its processes of production and monetary systems without recognizing the necessity for collaborative regulation by international authorities."

WELL, URK. The professor had the assistance of a committee of 56 philosophers in creating this work of banality. You wonder, reading it over, if the laws of gravity kept them from floating off on moonbeams. What they are proposing, in essence, is to submerge those political and moral traditions that we call "western civilization" in a barbarian sea of alien customs and ideologies. What becomes of personal freedom in a world order of one man, one vote? When all the free-lancers of the professor's world community start to vote, what "equitable" distribution of resources would result?

These babblers talk of a rule of law under the broadened jurisdiction of the World Court. Rule by whose law? Would they like the Soviet Union's law on private property? Would they prefer India's law on freedom of the press? Would they be pleased by a nice Brazilian view of babies corpus?

To be sure, in many ways men and nations are indeed interdependent. Every idiot knows that. It goes without saying. But in many essential ways, we have been and must remain wholly independent. And it is to that proposition, if we are replying declaratis, that we ought again to pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

Hunting with a friend

WASHINGTON, D.C. — It would be possible to have more faith in the Civil Service Commission's efforts to eliminate lavish entertainment by defense and space contractors if Civil Service Chairman Robert Hampton had not been entertained by some of the same government contractors.

Hampton, whose agency sets ethical

standards for the whole government, admits that he has accepted free hospitality at a hunting lodge leased by Rockwell International "about twice a year" for the last six years.

The Civil Service Commission chairman distinguishes his own hunting forays at Rockwell's hunting lodge at Wye Island on the Chesapeake Bay from the entertainment of the high-ranking Pentagon brass who have come in for sharp criticism for duck and goose hunting at Rockwell and Northrop hunting lodges.

"The Civil Service Commission doesn't deal directly with the contractors," Hampton explains. "And I can't imagine any circumstances where Civil Service Commission officials would have a basic conflict of interest in accepting normal hospitality from defense or space contractors."

ALTHOUGH HAMPTON initially had declared that Rockwell International had no direct contract with the Civil Service Commission, he later had to amend that because one of his division chiefs called him to inform him that the Civil Service Commission had a $74,000 contract with Rockwell.

Chairman Hampton said he would not have gone duck and goose hunting at the Rockwell Lodge on Maryland's eastern shore "if it had not been for a longtime personal friendship" with one of Rockwell's officials.

"We were a part of a little hunting group that had leased our own hunting area, and that was the basis of our original friendship when he was an official of North American Aviation," Hampton said. "When North American merged with Rockwell, the Rockwell lodge became available to him for his personal use."

Hampton stressed that his friend at Rockwell "was not one of the high muckety mucks" in the company but "just another employee." He declined to name his longtime friend "and to drag him through a lot of publicity" because "he's had a personal tragedy."

CHAIRMAN Hampton said he is deeply troubled over the pattern of entertaining by defense and space contractors that has resulted in the Northrop Corp. being forced to repay the Air Force $564,013 in improper costs charged for entertaining Pentagon employees, but that the Civil Service Commission "can only lay down the ethical guidelines."

After Civil Service lays down the general ethical guidelines for all government agencies, including the Defense Department and NASA, it "approves" the ethical rules and regulations of the agencies.

"But we have no power and no personnel to investigate whether the agency heads are enforcing those standards," Hampton said. "We get into it only when there is some congressional investigation such as the current investigation."

Hampton, who has been a member of the Civil Service Commission since 1961 and chairman since 1969, said that he was "not at all sure that we should have any greater authority for enforcement of the ethical standards."

"If we had the authority we would eventually get the responsibility, and I believe that the responsibility must be on the heads of the agencies and departments," Hampton said. "If there is a need for the examination of how the ethical standards are being enforced, it can be done by Congress or by some other outside group."

HAMPTON SAID that "there has been a gradual tightening of the ethical standards over the years."

"What was perfectly acceptable as ordinary business practice suddenly is not acceptable anymore," Hampton said. "That is what happened to Northrop and Rockwell and their hunting lodges."

The Civil Service chairman discounted the idea that major defense contractors who entertained Civil Service Commission members or officials would appear to have an undue amount of influence in connection with agency reprisal action against "whistle blowers" on corruption or favoritism.

"We are not a party to the contract, and in personnel disputes we simply try to be the referee between the employee and the agency," Hampton said. "I don't see that there would be any possible conflict of interest."

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., is less complacent about the cozy defense industry relationships across the whole government.

"The problem is pressure and influence," Proxmire said. "Not overt pressure (on specific officials), but an insidious variety that stems from consciously cultivating a network of friendships and obligations through numerous favors and benefits."

It is not a mark of high ethical sensitivity when Chairman Hampton does not recognize the appearance of conflicts in his own conduct when he has gone hunting at the Rockwell hunting lodge in the company of legislators, military men and the defense contractors with whom they have done business.

Scare tactics

EDITOR:

After reading yet another article about Cherry Manor, I would like to speak out publicly against Mr. Frank Arundel's "scare tactics."

My husband and I put everything we had into buying our home here in Cherry Manor almost four years ago. As we were moving in, we were visited by Mr. Arundel, who gave us a slip of paper with a phone number on it. He instructed us to "call this number if you smell anything in the air." We learned later that the number was that of the air pollution control district.

We were also asked if we would give money and join the home owners' association, a small group that we have learned by no means represents the majority of home owners in this area. However, what this association does affects us all, whether we belong or not.

Propositions unsanctified and unwanted by residents have publicly been proposed by the chairman of this association, supposedly for the good of all concerned. Mr. Arundel as chairman complained to the Public Utilities Commission so vehemently about the railroad nearby that the PUC came out here to investigate and constantly observe for two days. In the end they gave the Union Pacific Railroad more than a clean bill of health. The Air Resources Board and the APCD and the health department have been contacted numerous times by Mr. Arundel and they also have responded with costly taxpayer-paid investigations. Again and again the results are that Mr. Arundel's charges against nearby industry were exaggerated. I object also to the volume of time and taxpayer dollars spent by the city of Long Beach in checking out Mr. Arundel's charges in behalf of the Cherry Manor Homeowners Association.

I have had asthma all my life. My condition has not worsened any after moving here and yet I have been asked to sign papers attributing my condition to the proximity of industry.

I have gone to city council meetings, public meetings where Mr. Arundel has spoken with his voice of doom. I have heard over and over that we residents will all be burned alive in our beds, will die of cancer, or suffer some other horrendous fate because industry is our close neighbor. Mr. Arundel has lived here in Cherry Manor for well over 30 years and to me he certainly appears to have suffered no ill effects.

I'm so thankful that we live in a country where freedom of speech is available to everyone, but who draws the line where Cherry Manor is concerned? Haven't we residents had enough bad publicity about our neighborhood? In our opinion the false charges and accusations against our industrial neighbors, the danger cries by a few people, have done far more damage to property values than the closeness of industry could ever do.

Bike route

EDITOR:

Thanks to the farsighted cooperation between the city councils of Long Beach and Seal Beach and to the state of California, it is now possible for one to safely ride a bicycle from Seal Beach Boulevard to the Long Beach State campus via a new bike route which parallels the San Diego and Garden Grove freeways in Seal Beach and has access to the campus in Long Beach.

With the general criticism that usually is hurled upon city council members and city employees I feel it imperative that the public be aware of one citizen's appreciation.

Persons interested in seeing the completion of a San Gabriel River bike route to Pacific Coast Highway might consider writing to appropriate state officials to enlist their support as it is essential to acquire state funding for an underpass of the San Diego Freeway.

Again, thanks to the cities of Long Beach and Seal Beach for the new bike route.

Unconscionable

EDITOR:

It would now appear that our chief county administrator, Harry Hufford, intends to arrange for a special tax override election to help the county of Los Angeles overcome a $114-million revenue shortage for 1978-79.

Is it really necessary to recover that money for Los Angeles County when actually hardly any of the supervisors made any move to actively put a stop to their reckless spending programs? One supervisor did object to the election for extra taxes. That was Pete Schabarum. He labeled the special tax election as "unconscionable."

Perhaps the county needs to operate by the same method in which private business is forced to do. The property owners need to decide if those 85,000 county employees are really that important, and must the county continue buying new buildings to house more mountains of inefficiency. At least we can take heart in the fact that Pete Schabarum has made his position clear and wants to stop the huge tax rip-offs. Now if only those other four kings will step forward to be counted.

Horrible death

EDITOR:

After obtaining my dog license the other day, I walked around to the back of the shelter to see the animals. The sad look on their faces seemed to reflect the doom that lay ahead for them. It depressed me so, I only wish I could have taken them all home.

An elderly male worker walked by pushing a cart that is used to deliver the dogs or cats to their death. I stated to him: "It will sure be a blessing when animals don't have to be put to sleep by those horrible decompression chambers. It's such a horrible death." His reply really shocked me. He said, "I wouldn't want it any other way."

My Lord, with people like him we'll never get a law passed to abolish this terrible way to dispose of sick and unwanted animals.

I would think the revenue from all the license tags, fines, etc., would enable a more humane way, like a shot in the leg, like I had to have done with a poor old sick dog of mine.

It might take a little more time, but it would be the humane thing to do. These iron traps must be abolished or we have a very sick society.

School aided

EDITOR:

In these times of public mistrust and negative attitudes toward our elected officials, I would like to sound a positive note for my state assemblyman, Frank Vicencia, and his administrative assistant, Harvey Howard, of California's 54th Assembly District.

We own a very small nonprofit facility — the Barbara Dawson Educational Center in Downey — and operate solely on tuition money, donations and our own fund-raising programs. As you can well imagine, when our money gets caught up in the bureaucratic red tape, we stand on the brink of financial disaster. It was just such a time that Mr. Vicencia and Mr. Howard brought pressure to bear and the money started to trickle in that allowed us to meet some of our payroll and fiscal obligations.

Mr. Vicencia also has pledged to look into the possibility of upgrading state Sedgwick funds for special education, which has not been done for over eight years.

I heartily encourage all parents in the 54th Assembly District to write a note of thanks to these men who are totally interested in our children's welfare.

It would be of considerable assistance to Mr. Vicencia for all Californians "who are parents, family or friends of our very special children to contact their assemblyman or senators and encourage them to work for the benefit of our special children."

Our doctors

EDITOR:

There was a most interesting article in your paper by Bob Schmidt on Jan. 25. The article, "Anyone mention the patient?" held one statement which, in my opinion, would solve most of the problems involved in the malpractice battle.

The statement: "What if doctors, a decade or two decades or a generation ago, had made vigorous efforts to rid their profession of the incompetent and the careless?"

It seems to me that our medical men would be the best equipped to know when there are men or women in their profession who are not upholding the time-honored Hippocratic Oath. Also, if our doctors were to be a bit more frank with their patients, and would take the time to listen, I believe there would be a far greater understanding between them, which just might prevent any need for future lawsuits.

Since I have never felt that any physician was divine, or infallible, I would not expect a guarantee for any treatment. However, I do have a great respect for any person who has devoted his life to the medical profession, since I cannot believe that anyone would spend so many years for preparation in this field unless there was a sincere desire to help others. Fortunately, I have never had any physician whose ethics, in my opinion, were below standard, nor one whom I could not trust implicitly.

Councils need help

EDITOR:

In a recent letter, Frank Brejcha presented some seemingly compelling arguments in support of the I. P. T.'s strong opposition to the appointment of aides to members of the Long Beach City Council. He expressed concern that they will become cogs in a "political machine," and proposed that the city manager be permitted to run the city without "interference." Mr. Brejcha identified himself as a long-time municipal employee, and I respect his point of view.

However, it is important, I think, to look at another viewpoint — from the unique perspective of one who has served both as staff member and council member under the same city manager.

Mr. Brejcha's theory is just that — in the best public administration tradition. Reality may be something else again.

A city council can only identify clear goals and objectives — can only make sound policy decisions — if they are given complete, undistorted, unbiased data and a selection of options supplemented with projected ramifications, costs and consequences. Anything less than that renders a council's legislative efforts ineffective at best.

A city manager has at his command the total staff and resources of city hall. The city council has only what the manager chooses to give them — unless they have the time and/or the staff for independent research and study.

If a manager and staff supply reports, either by design or inadvertence, that are less than complete in the presentation of data and alternatives; that present figures in a manner leading to distorted conclusions; that reflect the biases of the manager and/or departmental directors; that are not timely, allowing the council sufficient opportunity for digestion, evaluation and citizen input; that offer ultimatums rather than options — then the council members, no matter how earnest their intent to do the best possible job for their citizens and their community, are rendered impotent.

A city manager can and does effectively control policy by virtue of the kind of input he orchestrates.

A free democratic society is based on a system of checks and balances. There can be no checks and balances if there is only one source of input.

The city council member who has to spend 40 or more hours a week in pursuit of his or her livelihood, and who has no personal staff assistance, is precluded by sheer time strictures from the independent investigation that would afford the optimum basis for sound decision-making.

I submit that city councils need all the help they can get!

Union benefits

EDITOR:

In reply to Mr. William L. La Beau's bitter attack on organized labor, I would like to tell Mr. La Beau what a union does for its members.

I am 75 years old. I retired when I was 65, which makes 10 years; all these years I receive a check each month from our pension fund. Other benefits I am entitled to are medical, hospitalization, dental and optical. My husband is also covered by these benefits. True, I pay dues, and I have walked a picket line many times in my younger days. But for $3.50 a month where can a person get this kind of coverage?

At the present time when medical help is so expensive, I am very grateful my former employer believed in unions to protect his employees, and I thank God for all men who take a stand to help unions and stand up for them. They help the working people. What benefits do you get for right to work, and what protection?

I have been a union member over 35 years and I am proud of it.

Dealing with crime

EDITOR:

In "Penalties don't halt crime" (Feb. 2), Sydney Harris says that "harshness has always been the solution of the ignorant, whether in rearing a child or in rebuking a lawbreaker." If this is true, what we need is a lot more ignorant people, such as Los Angeles Police Chief Ed Davis.

I wonder what kind of logic Mr. Harris would use to explain why the most rapid increase in the history of violent crime has been since our judicial system was taken over by a bunch of left-wing intellectuals who believe that criminals are good people who have been victimized by society.

Spending priorities

EDITOR:

Opposition to the real estate transfer tax, the sewer tax and unnecessary spending has demonstrated how the taxpayers feel.

In the Independent of Feb. 4, comments by members of the city council and City Manager John Mansell were very informative. Mrs. Renee Simon said that inasmuch as petition signers were from all parts of the city, cutbacks should be city-wide in such things as street sweeping, tree trimming and services that affect every resident.

Does Mrs. Simon favor top priority cutbacks first? Is this intended to punish the petition signers? Is this the same old trick to raise more money for essential services and then spend the surplus on luxury items?

It is evident that a priority spending list is of the utmost importance!

LOUIS MURRAY

My money lies over the ocean

NEW YORK — The papers hint at crateloads of dollars being flown secretly through the night. They are flown to Italy. They are flown to Japan. One imagines the barely concealed delight with which the delivery men are met, brawny Italian and Japanese piano movers knocking at the lucky door.

"Who's there?" "Air freight delivery. Where do you want these crates of dollars?"

What happy scenes in faraway lands! I read these stories with pleasure, as I read all stories about people getting rich, for I, too, just for money and hope to unlock the secret of amassing it by studying tales of how others have turned the trick.

MY FAMILY smiles secretly behind their cereal spoons as I read these stories. They think me incapable of richness.

Listen, I tell them. Crateloads of dollars are being flown secretly through the night. To have one delivered, one has only to be an Italian general with a yearning to restore his homeland to the glorious era of Mussolini.

The details are right here in the paper. A cool $800,000 has been delivered to a single Italian general, courtesy of the United States Treasury. My family is outraged by this. They hate to see a man get rich. Especially with my money.

The CIA apparently takes the same sour-grapes attitude. It strongly opposed sending my money to the general. Fortunately for him, the American ambassador in Rome still believed in Horatio Alger, for he overruled the CIA, and the story has had its happy ending.

I NOTE the ambassador's name is Graham Martin, the same man who just last year, as ambassador to Saigon, undertook to balm the anguish of the collapsing Vietnamese government with several hundred million dollars, only to be stymied by spoilsports in Congress.

Russell Baker

Martin figures actively in my schemes for ending up rich. When I become a right-wing general in Asia or Italy, I shall have long lunches with Martin.

The family thinks this absurd. Crates of dollars cannot be flown out of the Treasury on a mere ambassador's say-so, they argue. I shall need a friend at the White House. Henry Kissinger perhaps. How little they understand Kissinger. This Italian general has since been charged with criminal complicity in a plot to overthrow the Italian government. Kissinger is too canny to crate dollars to persons like that. He favors dumping them into forests of obscure African states where nobody can enjoy them.

I turn the papers and read of a Japanese chap whose arriving crates contained $7 million. The press describes him as a "powerful Japanese rightist, who had both political influence and ties to the Japanese underworld."

HIS CRATES were posted by the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. They were a gratuity for his help in selling Lockheed products in Japan. My family is outraged again. They can't stand to see a man get rich.

I believe everyone should have an equal opportunity to get rich on Lockheed Corp.'s money. After all, Lockheed's money is really my money, since I pay the taxes that keep it from collapsing.

If a Japanese rightist with strong ties to the underworld can hit the Lockheed jackpot for $7 million, what is to stop a clean-cut American boy who always helps old ladies across Second Avenue from answering the doorbell one morning and hearing the truckers ask, "Where do you want this crate of thousand-dollar bills?"

My family exchanges airy smiles behind their cereal spoons. It is persons like them, as Kissinger is always reminding us, who are America's own worst enemy, always questioning the government's foreign activities and indulging in self-flagellation. I must assemble them in the parlor this evening and lecture them on the danger of losing faith in our government.

The image is grainy and has a high level of contrast, with deep blacks and bright whites. The texture of the surface appears rough and uneven. The bright area in the upper right corner is somewhat indistinct but suggests a strong light source or a reflection. The overall composition is abstract and dramatic.

Stearns Park contract let

A $258,890 contract to build a community center in Stearns Park, 4520 E. 23rd St., has been awarded by the Long Beach City Council to C. J. Builders of Riverside.

The building will provide facilities for theatrical and social events, as well as for, crafts and other recreational programs.

Plans call for a single-story building of approximately 4,600 square feet in the northeast portion of Stearns Park. It will have two large rooms, served by a central kitchen, according to City Engineer Tom Marchese.

Coast plan said no aid to ports

By JACK O. BALDWIN
Maritime Editor

The proposed coastal plan, now in the hands of the state's legislators, fails to protect California ports as resources promoting the public welfare, says Fred B. Crawford, Los Angeles Harbor Department general manager.

Crawford is chairman of the Governmental Liaison Committee of the 19-member California Association of Port Authorities. Speaking against the plan as the association's spokesman, Crawford claims that "while the plan recognizes the importance of protecting the multimillion-dollar tourist and fishing industries, it does not include a similar and appropriate philosophy of protecting California's ports—which are a multibillion-dollar coastal industry."

The port executive further claims that, by ignoring the ports, the plan violates the intent of Prop. 20, the citizen-initiated Coastal Zone Conservation Act.

Crawford said there is serious concern about the restrictions the coastal plan legislation could put on the development of all California ports. He said the demands made by the ports' present and future customers call for the creation of new land masses and deepwater channels to handle the increasing size of new super-ships.

"Many of the Coastal Plan policies which insist on maximum use of existing piers and wharves are simply unrealistic," he alleges.

"In Los Angeles Harbor, some of the old wooden piers simply cannot support loads of more than 400 pounds per square foot. They cannot support heavy containerized cargo, for instance," Crawford pointed out.

"Advocates of the plan want no more dredging. If we must adhere to this restriction, our channels will become functionally obsolete, unable to allow passage of new deep-draft vessels," he said.

Crawford said members of CAPA are anxious to work with the Legislature to help draft legislation that would allow ports to continue to operate in a reasonable fashion for the benefit of all the people of the state and nation.

Anthony reelected

John H. Anthony, board vice chairman and chief executive officer, Metropolitan Stevedore Co., has been reelected president of the Marine Exchange of Los Angeles/Long Beach, Inc.

The new chairman of the board is Albert C. Martin, partner in Albert C. Martin & Associates.

Warren B. Penland, district manager of States Steamship Co., was elected vice president while J. Donald Hanauer, executive and general manager of the Los Angeles Area Chamber of Commerce, was reelected secretary, and Robert R. Dockson, president and chief executive officer, California Federal Savings and Loan Association, elected treasurer.

Others elected to the board of directors include: Thomas J. Thorley, Long Beach Harbor general manager; Lew E. Coppersmith, president of L.E. Coppersmith, Inc.; Frank L. George, manager-traffic, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; Edward J. Murphy, traffic manager, Union Pacific Railroad Co.; Walter L. Rabenstein, vice president Overseas Shipping Co.; and Robert D. Ryan, manager, Southern California, General Steamship Corp., Ltd.

Fred B. Crawford, Los Angeles Harbor general manager, was named director ex-officio for the exchange.

In-PORT-ant people

Capt. Manfred H.K. Aschemeyer is the new Prudential Lines district manager for Southern California, succeeding Ray Abbott, who will retire Feb. 14 after 40 years in the steamship business. After graduation in 1963 from the California Maritime Academy, Aschemeyer sailed for four years as an officer aboard American flag merchant ships. He became a master at 28, making him one of the youngest on the West Coast. In 1968, he returned to the academy as an instructor in the Department of Nautical Science, a position he held until March 1971, when he joined Prudential. Aschemeyer first served as freight traffic manager in Southern California, working out of Prudential's Long Beach office. A year later, he was appointed assistant district manager of traffic and operations in Southern California and in March 1973, was promoted to operations manager for the Pacific Division in San Francisco.

He attended schools in Baltimore, his birthplace, and in Glen Burnie, Md., before heading west to California. Aschemeyer is national president of the California Maritime Academy Alumni Association, is an honorary member of Lions International, and belongs to the Navy League and the Propeller Club.

A bronze for Sheila, bundle for Red bloc

INNSBRUCK (AP)—Sheila Young, a world class athlete who in three days has established herself as one of the top all-time Olympians, became the first American ever to win three medals in one Winter Games Saturday.

But East Germany won four gold medals and the Russians won two as the two Communist-bloc nations began to assert their expected domination of the XII Winter Games.

After Saturday's competition, the two Eastern European nations had won nine of 12 gold medals, and 20 of the 36 medals awarded.

But their expected superiority was overshadowed by Miss Young, a 25-year-old bundle of determination who won the bronze medal in the women's 1,000-meter speed skating race Saturday, and by her teammate, Leah Poulos, who won the silver medal in the same race.

Adding the bronze to her gold medal at 500 meters and the silver at 1,500 meters, Miss Young reached a pinnacle never attained by an American in the 52-year history of this snow and ice festival of international competition. Three Americans had won two gold medals in a

Calif., and Randy Gardner, 17, of Los Angeles.

Also on Saturday, the American national anthem was played for the first time, as Miss Young beamed proudly in receiving her gold medal from Friday's 500-meter race.

It could be the only time the song is heard here, but that is far from certain.

Figure skater Dorothy Hamill has a chance at a gold medal and the U.S. has two medal hopes in today's skiing competition. They Winter Games, but none had won three total medals.

Meanwhile, the fiercely competitive East Germans, backed by millions of dollars in government subsidy that provide for year-round training and top facilities, won gold medals in the 70-meter ski jump, the two-man bobsled and men's and women's luge competition.

Russia's Tatiana Averina, holder of 12 world speed skating records, won the women's 1,000-meter race ahead of Misses Poulos and Young.

In the cross-country, in luge, the ski jump and bobsledding, the Americans fared poorly, finishing no higher than 14th in any event.

In Saturday night's final event, the heavily-favored Russian duo of Irina Rodnina and Alexander Zaitsev won the gold medal in pairs figure skating.

Two East German couples were second and third, but the surprise was the fifth-place finish earned by the young American team of Tai Babbiona, 15, of Mission Hills, are Cindy Nelson of Lutsen, Minn., in the women's downhill ski race and Bill Koch of Guilford, Vt., in the men's 15-kilometer cross-country event.

Koch provided the surprise of these Games in winning the silver medal in the 30-kilometer cross country race Thursday. The 15-kilometer is his best race.

While American speed skaters continued to do well on the ice, a team controversy continued to boil between American women's coach Dianne Holum and U.S. Olympic Committee president Philip Krumm.

Miss Holum charged Krumm with "preventing America from starting its strongest skaters" by blocking skate-offs in Europe after what she considered inconclusive Olympic trials.

Krumm accused Miss Holum of acting "like a disgruntled parent" because one of her "pet pupils," team alternate Kim Kostrom, 18, of St. Paul, Minn., was prevented from starting in Saturday's race.

Ruffen tough, 92-67

By JIM McCORMACK
Staff Writer

When Clarence Ruffen, averaging 8.9 points per game, poured in 25 points Saturday night, basketball tacticians among the 3,404 Long Beach Arena onlookers rushed for their notebooks.

"They did a good job of getting the ball inside," suggested Fresno State coach Ed Gregory, "and then it was a matter of a guy starting well and staying hot."

"After 21 games, we're finally running our offense correctly," theorized Long Beach State's Dwight Jones.

Ruffen, an unassuming sophomore, had a more simplified impression of his contributions in Long Beach's startling, 92-67, triumph over Fresno.

"They were looking for me more," the 6-foot-8 forward from Richmond said with a smile after hitting 10 of 18 floor shots and five of seven free throws to easily surpass his previous career high of 18 points.

"They" were all Ruffen's teammates in general and Anthony McGee in particular. McGee finished with six assists.

"Fresno was giving us the lob," said Ruffen, who plays low post in the 49ers' power game offense, "and Tony did a super job of getting the ball inside to me."

A season ago Fresno had become the first Pacific Coast Athletic Association team to ever beat Long Beach in Long Beach by over-playing the "strong side (low post)" side of the 49er offense.

"We knew they'd do it again," said Jones, "and we made some adjustments, such as entering the offense more often from the weak side."

But it was still the basic principle of the power game—getting the ball to the low post—that proved most devastating.

Ruffen had 19 points in the first half and he got 12 of them as Long Beach (10-10), nursing a 16-15 lead, went on a 30-10 explosion in the final 11:31 of the half to establish a 46-25 intermission advantage on the way to its third PCAA triumph in five games.

"Our best half of the year?" echoed Jones, "I could take our best minute out of the first half of each game we've played this year, splice them into a highlight film and they still wouldn't be as good as this one."

Penguins plaster inept Kings, 7-3

By AL LARSON
Staff Writer

You really have to hand it to the Pittsburgh Penguins.

The Kings did just that Saturday night, surrendering four goals in the first 17 minutes en route to a 7-3 shelling before 11,606 Forum fans who booed to watch such misery.

It marked the fourth successive loss to the Penguins, all by lopsided scores, and the Kings now find themselves only 10 points ahead of third-place Pittsburgh.

The mood in the Kings' dressing room was one of disbelief after the Pens notched their first road win since last taking the ice at the Forum Dec. 20. Since then, the Pens have lost eight games and managed one tie during their dry spell.

"The way we played tonight was like our first game of the season," Kings coach Bob Pulford said dejectedly.

"Nobody knew anybody out there. We made more mistakes tonight than in the last five games."

"It wasn't (Gary) Edwards' tip-in by Johnson made it 39-33 at the half.

UCLA outbounced the Cougars, 50-34. The Bruins shot 50.6 per cent (40-for-79) and also hit 11 of 11 from the charity line. The Cougars hit 44.4 per cent (32-for-72).

AT SEATTLE, Chester Dorsey scored 20 of his career high 24 points in the first half, to ignite sixth-rated Washington to a comeback victory over the Trojans.

Seven-foot center James Edwards topped the Huskies with 28 points.

USC, 11-9 for the season and 0-7 in conference play, led 29-16 with 11 minutes, three seconds remaining in the first half.

But Dorsey's play became a dominant factor and helped Washington boost its season mark to 18-2 and its Pac-8 record to 5-2.

Dorsey, a junior guard, hit two foul shots to tie the game 41-41. His pass on a fast break gave teammate Mike Neill a layin and the Huskies their first lead of the game, 49-47, with 1:29 to go in the first half.

But Pronovost and Syl Apps beat Edwards in the final 25 seconds of the period to rebuild the Pens' four-goal lead.

Casper still tops in Hope

Nicklaus trails by one; Miller third

By DOUG IVES
Staff Writer

PALM SPRINGS—Johnny Miller was certain he had lost all chances of defending his Bob Hope Desert Classic title with 19 putts on the first nine holes Saturday. But he was wrong.

Miller rallied for a 32 on the back side and a 68 total at Indian Wells which moved him into a tie for third place, only two strokes behind leader Billy Casper, who matched Miller's 68 for a 9-under 279 standing.

In between the two is a guy named Jack Nicklaus as well as young Rik Massengale, who may be fated to outscore the superstars. He is a University of Texas graduate, as is Ben Crenshaw who has won the last two tour titles.

Also in the running is Brian (Buddy) Allin, the leader for the first three days. He carded a respectable 71 at tough La Quinta and is tied with Miller at 7-under-par.

One other golfer is within striking distance at 6-under, but since

Dave Newquist has never been a contender before—his best finish as a rookie in 1975 was 27th—he doesn't figure to withstand the pressure of being paired with Nicklaus.

THE MAN who will be missed the most is Arnold Palmer. He had to withdraw because of the death of his father in Florida. A five-time winner here, Palmer was in 10th place after 54 holes.

Miller won this event last year by shooting 21 under par. He can't believe he is contention now at 7-under, nor can he believe he is putting so badly.

"If I had been putting only average this tournament would be no contest," said the glib Mormon. "You can't believe the number of short putts I've missed. I've never hit the ball better off the tee. My shots are carrying 260 yards in the air, which means I'm flying over all the trouble."

Miller three-putted twice on the first nine and also missed two six-footers. But he got his act back together just in time on the incoming nine holes, canning birdie putts of 20, 5, 21 and 2 feet.

"I told myself 'You dog, you've given the tournament away' after that performance on the front," said Miller. "I was shocked when I reached the 16th hole and found that 9-under was leading."

Miller was as refreshing as Nicklaus and Casper were boring. The latter two weren't the least bit enthused that they might win here and walk off with $36,000. Since Nicklaus has won 58 tour titles and Casper 51, long ago reaching millionaire status, the ho-hum attitude was predictable.

CASPER did admit he feels fortunate to be leading.

"I've had two rounds where I took 33 and 34 putts," said Billy, who has gone off his buffalo meat diet and is rotund again. Normally you have to putt better than that to be in contention.

"I'm not sure how I'll do tomorrow," Casper went on. "I used to get in the groove and keep it for awhile. Now my game changes every day. I guess that comes from growing old."

Casper is 46 and has won only one tournament in the last three years.

Nicklaus shot 69 Saturday and missed numerous chances to shave strokes.

UCLA rolls along; USC falls

Marques Johnson scored 34 points to pace UCLA to a 91-71 victory over Washington State Saturday night at Pullman.

The victory kept the Bruins one game in front of Washington, which handed winless USC its seventh successive defeat at Seattle, 91-79, and Oregon State in the Pacific-8 Conference.

Richard Washington was No. 2 scorer for the Bruins with 19 points. Norton Barnhill led WSU with 27 points, a career high, followed by Steve Puidokas with 23.

Both teams played evenly until 4:38 in the first half, when UCLA hit the first of eight baskets in a row—including four by Johnson—to make it 29-12 and UCLA maintained the lead the rest of the game.

WSU close to within four, but a RECORD NIGHT FOR SITTLER

TORONTO (AP)—Toronto center Darryl Sittler set an all-time National Hockey League single-game record of 10 points and tied the modern mark of six goals as the Maple Leafs walloped the Boston Bruins 11-4 Saturday night.

With a crowd of 16,485 roaring louder and louder with each point, the 25-year-old Sittler, in his sixth

NHL season, started modestly enough with a pair of assists in the opening period.

But he exploded for three goals and two more assists in a six-goal second period barrage that gave the Leafs an 8-4 bulge and then scored all three Toronto goals in the final period—his 25th, 26th and 27th of the season.

L.B. race March 28 a $510,000 event

By ALLEN WOLFE
Staff Writer

Automobile racing is big business and nowhere is it more evident than Formula One Grand Prix racing.

Chris Pook knows only too well. Early this week, the president of the Long Beach Grand Prix Association announced all provisions as stipulated in contract negotiations between his organization and the Formula One Constructors Association have been fulfilled, thus clearing the path for the inaugural United States Grand Prix West through the streets of Long Beach on March 28.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT is the culmination of a 14-month, transcontinental correspondence between Pook, the Long Beach travel agent who conceived the idea of Grand Prix racing through city streets, and Bernard Ecclestone and Max Moseley. They are chief spokesmen for the Formula One Constructors Association based in London, England, contractual and financial representative for 95 per cent of all teams currently involved in Grand Prix racing.

"Negotiations went very smoothly and with a minimum of disagreement," said Pook, an English native who has been a resident of Long Beach since 1967. "We have what I would describe as a 'standard agreement' with the FICA, very similar to the agreements held by other countries hosting Formula One races this year."

The "standard agreement" calls for a prize base of $265,000 plus another $245,000 "for transportation of personnel and equipment" from Europe via charter jet, making the entire package an eye-popping $510,000.

"This is the same contract Brazil paid for its race (held Jan. 25) and the same South Africa will have to pay next month (March 7)," explains Pook. "The extra money ($245,000) may seem prohibitive, but not when you consider the logistics and personnel involved."

The monies will be used to hire three British Caledonia Airways charter jets one week prior to the race, one carrying about 225 members of the Grand Prix circuit (drivers, mechanics, car owners, officials and approximately 40 members of the European press). The other two charters, carrying 26 Grand Prix cars worth an estimated $3 million, will leave London on successive days—March 22 and 23. Each trans-Atlantic flight is scheduled to clear customs in Bangor, Maine, before arriving at Long Beach Airport.

FACES OF GRAND PRIX

Colin Chapman, left, director of Team Lotus, and drivers Carlos Reutemann of Argentina (Brabham) and James Hunt, right, of England (McLaren) will be in Long Beach March 28 for inaugural running of United States Grand Prix West.

"Contracts for Formula One rounds in Europe are understandably cheaper because transportation is less of a problem," says Pook. Organizers for races like the French Grand Prix at the Paul Ricard course on July 4 pay $285,000 and the Formula One Constructors must provide their own surface transportation.

Actually, the contract between the Long Beach Grand Prix Association and FICA isn't really a contract in the purest sense of the word.

"Bernie (Bernard Ecclestone) and his group are very informal in their dealings," said Pook. "We both have a letter and agreement of exchange, whereby they agree to perform and we agree to pay."

"I talked with Bernie on a number of occasions and we had a long discussion last October (the U.S. Grand Prix at Watkins Glen, N.Y.). But the basic agreement was solidified over a Western Union telex machine when we acknowledged receipt of each others' sanction. It was as simple as that."

The Formula One Constructors Association (car owners) and the Grand Prix Drivers Association (race drivers) form what amounts to the tightest, close-knit body in automobile racing and such loyalty insures the health and continued prosperity of the world driver's championship circuit.

Any country or group, like the Long Beach Grand Prix Association, wishing to stage a Formula One event must deal first with the Federation Internationale de L'Automobile, world governing body for auto racing in Paris, to obtain sanction and then with FICA to finalize purse and a myriad of other race-related details.

The owners of 20 of the 26 cars entered in next month's United States Grand Prix West are members of the Formula One Constructors Association. They are Ferrari (two cars), McLaren (two cars), Brabham (two cars), Lotus (two cars), Shadow (two cars), Tyrrell (two cars), Williams (two cars), March (two cars), Ensign (two cars), Penske (one car), and Parnelli (one car). Others rumored to sign as FICA members shortly are BRM (one car) and Surtees (one car). The only "pirate" teams, so to speak, are Copersucar from Brazil and Ligier Matra from France.

After the race, all prize monies will be turned over to FICA, who will distribute the purse in the way it deems fit.

"If the owners go according to Hoyle, no one will know how much the winner's share of the purse will be," says Pook. "Formula One racing is like a travelling circus—everyone shares in the pie."

"Don't forget, each car represents an investment of about $135,000, so it's vital to the Grand Prix people that each team gets its share to insure continued health. They pay for performance."

Niki Lauda tunes up for L.B. Grand Prix

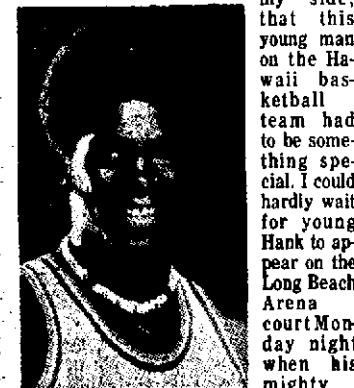

PLAYING THE NAME GAME

Ever since my last trip to Hawaii in December, 1974, I had been licking my chops in anticipation of the University of Hawaii basketball team's first visit to Long Beach to meet Dwight Jones' 49ers.

My reason was clear: Brightest star of the Rainbow dribblers was an engaging chap named Henry Hollingsworth.

The fact that Henry included an "s" in his last name was of little importance. Some of the best of the old families never got around to modernizing their surnames.

But with the name of Henry Hollingsworth, I reasoned with complete logic on my side, that this young man on the Hawaii basketball team had to be something special. I could hardly wait for young Hank to appear on the Long Beach Arena court Monday night when his mighty Rainbows tackled Long Beach State.

HENRY HOLLINGSWORTH
What's in a name?... plenty

Chillingly, it almost didn't happen. The Hawaii basketball team will play at Long Beach Arena, but for awhile Henry Hollingsworth wasn't scheduled to appear!

HENRY AND THREE teammates were suspended a couple days ago by athletic director Edward F. Chui.

Henry didn't cheat on an examination. He didn't slug the athletic director. He didn't even stay out late at night drinking mai-tais and chasing wahinis.

Young Henry and his teammates had the gall to make a TV commercial, an apparent violation of the NCAA constitution although the commercial was done gratis. The NCAA did not suspend the quartet—executive director Warren Brown merely reprimanded the university via letter—but the school decided to take its own punitive action and, typically Hawaiian, over-reacted.

Sadly, my long-awaited dream seemed doomed never to materialize. However, for reasons best known to themselves, the Hawaii powers rescinded the suspension 48 hours later.

The Rainbow coach, however, was not fortunate. Bruce O'Neil was relieved of his duties by the school Friday over the incident and a local investigation is pending. Assistant coaches Al Melendez and Rick Pitino will be at the helm against the 49ers Monday.

I TAKE SLIGHT consolation in the fact that Henry Hollingsworth must be some kind of player if he was considered important enough to make a TV commercial. Such an honor is reserved only for the DiMaggios, Namaths and Rodney Ripeys of this world.

On my last visit to the Islands, freshman Henry was just coming into his own. He was the headline hogger on the Honolulu sports pages in December, 1974.

The 18-year-old had rocketed into the big time by being promoted from the Rainbow junior varsity squad to the varsity. An Alabama native who was a prep sensation in New York, Henry merited the promotion by averaging a sparkling 40 points during the early jayvee games.

HANK HOLLINGSWORTH

As a junior varsity player, Henry was getting more "ink" than the chaps on the more prestigious varsity.

The promotion, which would earn only a line at the end of the notes' paragraph around here, was big news in Hawaii, where the natives usually have little more to cheer about than the size of the surfers' waves.

But Henry was on his way.

ALTHOUGH ONLY 5-11, Hollingsworth proved his lack of size was no handicap to a bulldog with talent by being voted best defensive player on a varsity team for which he didn't play even one full season.

Henry wasn't even recruited by the Rainbows. Although he was an all-Long Island selection at Freeport High in New York and he had a lot of colleges panting in his wake, little Hank was a walk-on to the Oahu campus without an athletic scholarship.

Henry H. disdained the offers and followed the then new Hawaii jayvee coach from New York. Once his dazzling wares were exhibited, Henry was

As folks around here are aware, a Hollingsworth, or even a Hollingsworth, is always on a need basis.

IT WAS MY MISFORTUNE to arrange a long-distance telephonic interview with Henry on the same day that the young tiger was informed of his untimely (for both of us) suspension.

"I don't think Henry is in a mood to be interviewed," said Ed Inouye, Hawaii's saddened sports information director. "He might go to Long Beach with the team because his scholarship won't be taken away, but he's pretty down in the dumps right now."

I guess. But he certainly wasn't any lower than old HHH in California.

Thanks to Inouye, however, the Hollingsworth in California got a deeper insight to the remarkable talents of the Hollingsworth in Hawaii, albeit no interview.

Henry competed in four post-season all-star games his last high school season in New York and was selected the most valuable player in THREE of them. Try that sentence on again for size, friends.

He held the alltime Freeport High record for career assists (350) and most assists in one season (150), played in 70 consecutive games and was the school's third alltime leading scorer (960 points).

"HENRY IS ONE of the best stand-still jump shooters around," said Inouye, clearly enamored himself with young Hank's reservoir of talent.

"He gave us one of the best young backcourt combinations in the nation. He's so determined on defense that he completely denies the offensive man the ball. He forces the offensive man into a foul."

"Henry gives 100 per cent every time he's on the court. He's the hardest worker on the team."

Are you getting the idea of what we almost would have missed Monday night?

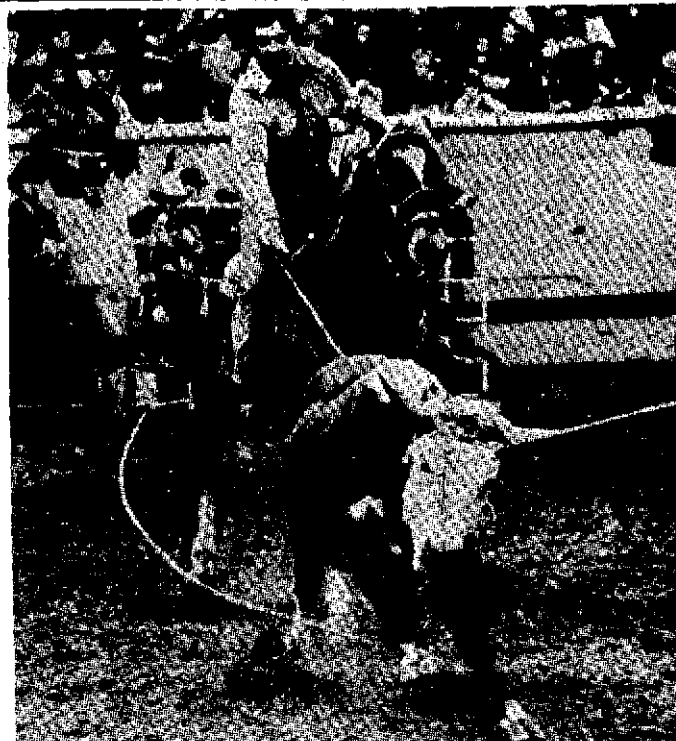

A communications major, Henry hopes to become a disc jockey or a television announcer. Hopefully, he will refrain from making further TV commercials.

Communications is an excellent major for Henry, for he has little trouble communicating. The Hawaii football coach will attest to that fact.

"Henry's room is over mine in the dormitory," Larry Price walked while the football and basketball teams were sharing the dorm in December. "When he turns his damned stereo on full blast, everyone has to listen to his kind of music."

That's my boy.

But I wish that Henry had turned to me for advice before he consented to make that damned TV commercial. His whimsy almost ruined my whole basketball season.

Ride 'em cowboy

Leo Camarillo, a rodeo champ, won almost $51,000 last year but hardly anybody noticed because he is not in big time sport. Rodeo returns to Long Beach Arena next Friday for three-day run.

Nobody knows a rodeo champ

"Cowboys are funny. They're different from most athletes in that they're independent people. It's kind of sad, because it takes away from the sport." — Leo Camarillo.

Last week's preliminary Superstars competition included Rafer Johnson, Maury Wills, Johnny Rutherford, Leo Camarillo...

Who? "I didn't set the world on fire," says Camarillo, "but it was fun because I got to identify with other athletes."

Camarillo's game is rodeo, which comes to mind with the return of the Golden State Rodeo Co. to the Long Beach Arena next weekend. He is the current world all-around champion, legitimately placing him among the elite of sport. He concludes that all successful athletes have one thing in common.

"We were all there to have fun," he says, "but under those smiles was the taste of defeat that none of us really appreciate."

BUT BEING a barnyard superstar isn't quite the same. A 10-gallon hat and the fancy gold and silver buckle are the only clues to his accomplishments. It frustrates him, not only for the satisfaction of his own ego but for the esteem of his sport.

"You know," he says, "cowboys are funny. They're different from most athletes in that they're independent people. It's kind of sad, because it takes away from the sport."

Rodeo, wrapped up in the saga of the Great American Cowboy, is one of the oldest competitive sports in the world and it hasn't changed much over the years. That, Camarillo believes, is part of the problem.

"Ninety per cent don't rodeo for a living," he says, "and the 10 per cent that put rodeo in the eye of the public don't have enough vote to make the rule changes that could make rodeo what it should be."

In other words, Leo concludes, "you've got 90 per cent that don't give a damn. They're doing what they want to do and they're happy."

ONE MAJOR rule change this year places less of a premium on a cowboy piling up as many points as possible by competing in as many rodeos as possible.

"You have to qualify among the top 15 to compete in the National Finals," Camarillo explains. "Then whoever wins the most money in his event will be crowned the world champion in that event."

So for the urban public, the national competition will be more clearly defined. But it will be tough on the top hands, such as Camarillo. His specialty is team roping, and he won it the first five years he competed in the National Finals at Oklahoma City, establishing that event as the "Camarillo benefit."

"If you have a man who dominates an event it takes away from him, because on any given day you can get beat," Leo says. "But I think the organization has to try those things to get ahead in the sports world."

Camarillo credits Larry Mahan, the former champion, with doing "more for rodeo than anybody ever has. I hope to do as much."

"But you have a lot of friction being a champion. You have to be careful how you say things. There's a lot of politics and jealousy in the sport. It's difficult for a champion to get things the way he wants 'em because people will think he's thinking of himself... and to a certain extent, he is."

"I express my feelings like any other winner would in any other sport and I get into some arguments over it. A lot of others are kind of afraid to say what they think because they just want to stay one of the group. But I've gotten away from that. I don't like to be a follower."

LEO LOUIS CAMARILLO, 30, of Mexican and Indian ancestry, can remember when he was just one of the group.

"There's quite a bit of difference between a rodeo cowboy and just a cowboy," he says. "I've been both places. I've had to work those long hours for 15 dollars a day."

"It's kind of like the ghetto. The minority groups in the city ghetto get out playing basketball or baseball. Rodeo is a cowboy's out."

Last year, as world champion, Leo won $50,831 and that big, expensive buckle, which beats punching cows in anybody's ghetto. Glen Campbell's country song, Rhinestone Cowboy, is close to the truth, Leo says, "but most of the movies and songs are not realistic."

"They get away from what it really takes to make anything out of it. A lot of 'em express the way the life is as a drunken brawl or a good time or a kick-ass attitude. That's not the way it really is."

"You have to sacrifice a lot of hard work and family, it takes good management, a lot of things. It's tough to make it. I mean, I'm not wanting you to feel sorry for me, but it's a real chore."

LEO CREDITS Sharon, his bride of two years, with much of his success.

"I have a little wife," he tells it. "She's a very competitive young lady herself, and I owe her a lot. She puts up with a lot of hard times. When I'm not home she has to handle all the business things, along with having to keep my horses rode and exercised. She has danged sure made a contribution to my championship and my winnings."

"On top of that, she's a champion in her own right. She went to college on a rodeo scholarship, was a world champion goat tyer and she's a very accomplished roper. In 1973 she was the world champion steer undecorator. That's where you chase a steer like you're gonna throw it, only you just reach down and take a ribbon off its back."

Sharon also barrel races and has been an airline stewardess but Leo met her at a rodeo. They live on a 20-acre ranch in Oakdale, Calif., a few miles east of Modesto along the Stanislaus River, but will be moving soon to a 150-acre spread near Clements to the north.

Leo is opening his own tack business—Camarillo Enterprises.

SHARON ATTENDED Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, on a rodeo scholarship. Leo, born in Santa Ana and raised in Santa Ynez, skipped college and is sorry for it.

"I don't know if I was ignorant or what," he says. "I didn't even know I could go to college on a Mexican-Indian minority group type of thing or a rodeo scholarship, but education didn't mean much to me then."

He is articulate and his opinions are profound, but now that he's a champion, Leo Camarillo understands the need for something more—administrative and promotional skill that could lift his sport up by its bootstraps.

"I would like to see it grow to where I'd be recognized for what I am in more circles than just by people related to rodeo. I'd like to pick up a New York Times or Sports Illustrated and see rodeo recognized with stories people can relate to."

"If somebody would promote cowboys and rodeo like they do other sports, we could be recognized as professional athletes, too."

Sheila, Leah: Girls from back home

INNSBRUCK (AP)—It's a garland of multi-colored medals—gold, silver and bronze—for Sheila Young, a precious silver for Leah Poulos and wedding bells ahead for both of America's queens of the racing blades.

"My plans are to compete in the world championships, then retire this year and get married," said Miss Young, 25, of Detroit.

She captured the bronze in the Olympic 1,000 meters Saturday to hang around her neck along with the gold and silver medallions won earlier on the speed skating track.

She became the first American athlete, male or female, to win three medals in one year in the Winter Olympic Games.

"I had hoped to bow out on a high note," she said. "These three medals make it possible."

HER LONG-TIME teammate and keenest rival, Miss Poulos, 24, from Northbrook, Ill., was just as proud of the silver medal she won in Saturday's race, finishing 14-100ths of a second behind Russia's world record-holder, Tatiana Averina, and about a half-second ahead of Miss Young.

"I want to continue competing and I want to return to college in the fall," said Miss Poulos. "I would like to get married but Peter and I want to wait until we have more money. You need money to get married."

Miss Poulos' fiance is Peter Mueller, 21, of Mequon, Wis., who skates the 500, 1,000 and 1,500-meter races for the U.S. Olympic team.

"Peter and I have known each other since we were kids," Miss Poulos said. "We were just skating pals then. Now we've been engaged one-two years. Peter is a mirror

RFE kicked out by IOC

Associated Press

INNSBRUCK—A reporting team from Radio Free Europe, the U.S.-sponsored station broadcasting to Communist Eastern Europe, was drummed out of the Olympics Saturday night as a result of what was alleged to be Soviet pressure.

Seven reporters and four technicians handed in their accreditations in compliance with an order from the International Olympic Committee.

Sources said the technicality that led to invalidation of the accreditations "was cooked up by the Soviets."

The technicality cited was that the accreditations were not properly signed and stamped by a national Olympic committee. Because the station is based in Munich, the credentials were required to have German stamps but were without them.

Ian MacDonald, bureau chief for the station, said, "German colleagues here have drawn our attention to the fact that most of the German radio and television journalists also have identity cards which bear neither the signatures of the president and general secretary of the German NOC nor the NOC stamp."

MacDonald said the station would continue to report on the Games by buying tickets to the events and making its headquarters in a hotel.

'No way' U.S. can beat Czechs

INNSBRUCK—The young United States Olympic hockey squad, visions of a medal undaunted by a 6-2 opening-round Group A loss to the Soviet Union, goes against Czechoslovakia today.

The Czech coach says, "There is no way they (the Americans) can win."

Four years ago in Sapporo, Japan, the U.S. scored a stunning upset over Czechoslovakia en route to a silver medal under coach Murray Williamson.

"Our boys were about the same age," said Williamson, "but they were much more experienced. Czechoslovakia, Finland and Russia could all play in the top level of the National Hockey League."

Soldier killed on ski course

INNSBRUCK—A 19-year-old Austrian soldier, assigned to cleanup operations on the 12th Winter Olympics' downhill course, was killed Saturday when he crashed against a fence post while descending the slope on skis.

Pvt. Georg Dagn and members were cleaning up the slope where Austria's Franz Klammer won a gold medal Thursday.

Taiwan fighting to stay in INNSBRUCK—Taiwan is putting up a fight to stay in the Olympic Games.

Its National Olympic Committee circulated a booklet this week defending its position and declaring that its sportsmen will never participate as part of a mainland China team.

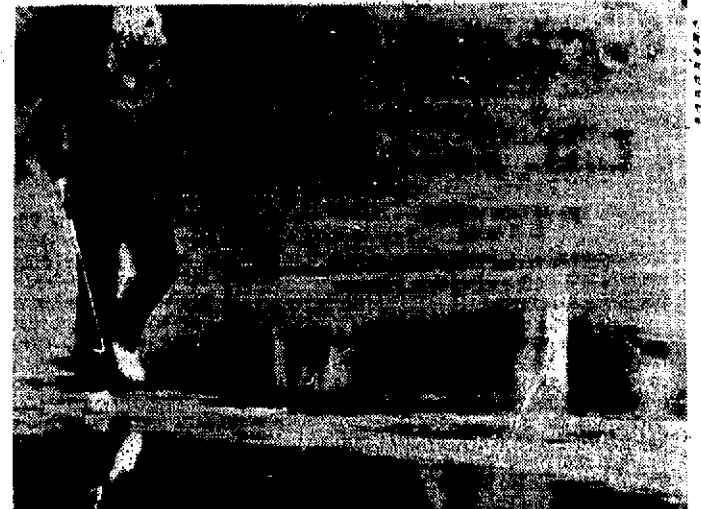

Peking has applied for IOC recognition but, as always, demanded that Taiwan be expelled from the Olympic movement. It said Taiwan athletes would be welcome to compete in a mainland Chinese team.

Young Newquist faces butterflies...and Jack

By DOUG IVES Staff Writer

PALM SPRINGS—One golfer will seem out of place today when the leaders tee off in the closing round of the Bob Hope Desert Classic.

That man, young Dave Newquist, doesn't mind admitting he will be nervous. But it isn't so much that he is in sixth place and on the verge of his biggest payday as it is being paired with Jack Nicklaus.

"I'll have a lot of butterflies," Newquist confessed. "I've never been in the hot box before, and I'm sure no one has ever seen me on television because I've never been on it before."

Newquist, who played the mini-tour circuit in Southern California for two years while residing in Anaheim, has played the best golf of his career here, posting rounds of 74 at Eldorado, 70 at La Quinta, 67 at Indian Wells and 71 at Bermuda Dunes.

"There are at least 100 golfers not on the tour who are as good as most of the ones out here," he said. "The mini-tour showed me that. Maybe with this new concept they have, everyone will get a chance."

The PGA has announced that in 1978 it will launch a meaningful secondary tour which offers 20 tournaments at $50,000. It is open to all-comers, although each player will face a sizeable entry fee, just like the mini-tours.

"It is expensive," says Newquist, "but it will give tor of the Kansas City Star.

Newquist's only regret is that this tournament isn't a four-rounder, like all others on the tour.

"I would be celebrating today with my biggest check," he said. "But I feel I will hold up okay tomorrow. I sure hope so. I need the money."

Newquist, 25, like so many young pros, is convinced he can make a living on the tour. But he feels sorry for the many others like him who have failed to qualify for a tour card.

"There are at least 100 golfers not on the tour who are as good as most of the ones out here," he said. "The mini-tour showed me that. Maybe with this new concept they have, everyone will get a chance."

"It is expensive," says Newquist, "but it will give how to handle the pressure until you get in that situation," said Newquist, a native of Kansas City. "I knew sooner or later I would be paired with a superstar. It had to happen sometime and it might as well be now."

The best Newquist finished in his rookie year was 27th at Milwaukee. He earned only $6,300 last year, about $24,000 short of making expenses. His sponsors are from Kansas City and include a city edi-

Stephenson enjoys 1st lead; Laura is 4 back

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — Jan Stephenson, who had never led a tournament, overcame windy conditions Saturday to record a three-under-par 69 for a two-stroke lead after 36 holes of the 54-hole, $60,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Miss Stephenson's two-under-par 142 total put her two shots ahead of defending champion Sandra Haynie and first round leader Sally Little, who were tied at 144. Miss Haynie fired her second straight even-par 72 and Miss Little soared to a 77 after posting a 67 Friday.

Franklin takes 9th grade title

Six-foot-six Ray Whiting scored 19 points and teammate Gary Lee added 14 to lead Franklin Junior High to the Long Beach ninth grade basketball championship with a 58-45 win over Marshall Saturday morning at Millikan High.

John Stephenson tipped in a basket at the buzzer to give HJH a 56-54 win over Marshall in the eighth-grade championship game. Jon Bollinger led HJH with 22 points while Scott Fox added 18.

You're the manager

What a round of golf really is a quiz with 18 questions and a slew of answers. On every tee the question is: How're you gonna play the hole?

If you tee up your ball and the urge hits you to take a slash at it like Arnold Palmer, you've already flunked that test.

The key mental aspect of this game is management — course management and self management. They go together.

TOO MANY PLAYERS don't discipline themselves to play within their ability. They change personalities on every tee — "I'm gonna smooth-stroke they baby like Gene Littler," or "Wham! Just like the Mex." Then bleep — just like Minnie Pearl.

Control your emotions and you'll get a clearer idea of each problem. It ain't an easy game, and it's downright miserable for a simpleton.

Don't try to kill every shot. Playing within yourself means not going for broke on each swing. Take a comfortable stance and give yourself a chance. Don't make a hole harder than it's meant to be.

The game's easier to manage form the fairways. Bad managers get a lot of experience playing from the rough. And their clubs get more flying time than American Airlines.

Woods tops Stones in marathon high jump

Tom Woods, representing the Pacific Coast Club of Long Beach, defeated Dwight Stones in the Los Angeles Indoor Games high jump that ended at 12:32 Saturday morning at the Forum.

Both cleared 7-4 but failed at 7-6. Then, in the jumpoff, they cleared 7-4 twice more but couldn't top 7-6 as the bar was moved up and down three times before the weary Woods finally won the three-hour competition at 7-2.

Dan Ripley, Pacific Coast Club, was voted male athlete of the meet after establishing an indoor pole vault record of 18 feet, 2 1/4 inches.

Friday night's late results:

High jump—Woods, Pacific Coast Club of Long Beach, 7-4; Stones, unat. 7-4; Fraser, Northridge St., 7-0; Koupel, P.C.C., 7-0 (Woods defeated Stones in jumpoff at 7-2 after each three times had cleared 7-4).

500m walk—Walker, Beverly Hills Striders, 6:11; Boudin, A. Sheriff's Dept., 6:46; Kandle, B.J. Striders, 6:52; Ryan, B.H. Striders, 7:26.

Women's mile walk—S. Brodick, Malibu Roadrunners, 7:11.9 (better than own indoor record of 7:15.2, 1975; L. Brodick, R.R., 8:09; Villavaso, R.R., 8:58).

Seattle returns to big leagues—in '77

SEATTLE (AP) — An agreement to buy an American League expansion franchise has been signed, bringing major league baseball back to this city after a seven-year absence, businessman Lester Smith and entertainer Danny Kaye said Saturday.

The two told a news conference that they will pay about $5.56 million for the franchise, which replaces the ill-fated Seattle Pilots.

A 20-year lease to the King County Domed Stadium will go along with the deal, though it has yet to be signed. A key feature of the lease will be a clause binding the franchise to stay in Seattle.

Still unsettled is the future of the area's lawsuit against the league, which seeks up to $32.5 million in damages for moving the last team, the Seattle Pilots. That franchise, bankrupt after its only season in 1969, was sold to a Milwaukee group in 1970.

Officials say the city, which spent $1.5 million in renovating Sicks Stadium for the Pilots, still is out about $600,000 and wants to recover that amount.

Smith told reporters that the cost of the franchise was very similar to the price Pacific Northwest Sports Inc. paid for the Pilots in 1968.

He admitted the pressure of the lawsuit against the league was a factor in the league's decision to expand.

"If there wasn't a lawsuit, we'd probably wouldn't have baseball here," Smith said.

Kaye outlined the group's previous plans to secure an established team. The six businessmen in the group had tried to purchase the Chicago White Sox and, when that effort failed, the San Francisco Giants.

"We would have preferred to be in 1976," Kaye said. "We weren't all that crazy about having an expansion club.

"It's more complicated and difficult to start from scratch."

Kaye said he expected the novelty of the domed stadium to attract fans when the team begins play in 1977.

"But the bottom line after the first and second year is going to be what is happening on the field," he said.

Of L.B. Sportsman's Club Covington at the helm

The Long Beach Sportsman's Club, which will reach its 40th birthday next year, installed its 1976 officers at the annual dinner-dance Saturday night at the clubhouse on Santa Fe Avenue. Claude Covington took over the president's gavel from Ron Brightenburgh.

Taking their offices with him were David Irmen, vice president; Bush Blumenstein, treasurer; Norman Covington, secretary, and Sandy Jones, sergeant-at-arms. Directors: Bob Neher, Bill Hamilton, Ray Beck, Dr. Tom Becker and outgoing president Brightenburgh.

Covington and his wife, Joyce, live at 1853 Poppy St., Long Beach, with three of their five children, Claude Jr. and Crystal. Two other children, Donna and David, are married.

Knowing about Covington and his hobbies, there is no doubt but that he will find 1976 one of his busiest years. His hobbies are fishing and Scouting. He has been involved in Scouting for several years with five years as a Cubmaster and three as a Scout commissioner for the Polaris District. He still holds that title.

Some of his other duties: Past president of the California Autobody Association and secretary for the board of directors of the State Body Shop Owners and Managers, a member of the Parents' Advisory Council for the Grant School for more than four years. He received the PTA Honorary Service Award for service to youth last year.

WITH THAT KIND OF RECORD, Claude should make things hum at the Sportsman's Club. Claude is a former Texan, having been born in Pampa in 1941. He moved west with his parents eight years later and was graduated from Poly High School in 1962. He then spent three years in the U.S. Navy. Returning to civilian life, he became assistant manager of the Penny Auto Body Works.

Although the Sportsman's Club is noted primarily for its great help to Ducks Unlimited each year, there are other events, such as: Hunting and fishing trips to Mexico; fishing charters to San Diego landings; annual Stampede and steak barbecue; annual luau, and the kids' fun-night for children of the members.

Fishing awards for the 1975 season were handed out Saturday night to the following:

Jed Welsh, most jewel points for trophy fish and largest yellowtail (28 pounds, 7 ounces); Harrison Moore, largest marlin (160 pounds); Rusty Thornton, largest albacore (36-12); Otis Kesler, largest salmon (10 pounds); Jed Welsh, largest corbina (3-7), and Bob Neher, largest trout (3-4).

Covington said that the club already is planning its annual Ducks Unlimited Night for April 19. The club already has raised enough money for one large lake project in Canada for breeding waterfowl, and is well advanced on still another DU project.

STOEGER PUBLISHING COMPANY, of South Hackensack, N. J., has just concluded a distribution arrangement with Crown Publishing Company under which Stoeger will take over the exclusive distribution of a new line of paperback titles to the sporting goods trade.

The large-size paperback versions are identical in every respect to the higher-priced hard cover originals except for the covers and will sell in the $4.95 and $5.95 bracket. The books will have a "Crown Stoeger imprint. Here are some of the initial titles ready for the sporting goods trade:

"Practical Black Bass Fishing," by Mark Sosin and Bill Dance; "Tackle Craft," by C. Boyd Pfeiffer; "Master Fly-Tying Guide," by Art Flick (that's a great one

Betcha didn't know that horseshoe pitching, while still a backyard hobby, has grown so much that it has become an international tournament sport. Well, that's right, and Otis W. Reno, who wrote a book about pitching horseshoes in 1963, finally revised it late last year. "Pitching Championship Horseshoes" came off the A. S. Barnes and Company presses just prior to Christmas. It is available now at $8.95 at book stores, or direct from the publishing company.

"For example, if a driver sets fast qualifying time and leads 10 laps, only to drop out with mechanical failure and finish 24th, he will be rewarded handsomely because he gave the crowd a bloody good show. If that happened in NASCAR stock car racing the team would go home with perhaps $100.

GRAND PRIX RACING can't operate that way because of the prohibitive cost."

The United States Grand Prix West is one of 14 world driver's championship races scheduled this year, and it is the first time in the history of Formula One that two events with full championship points will be held in the same country in the same year.

The United States Grand Prix has been held every year since 1962 at Watkins Glen, N.Y. This year's race will be held October 10.

Ticket sales for the Long Beach race have topped $240,000 since they went on mail order subscription Jan. 17, and "we are averaging between $8,000 and $12,000 in sales each day," says Pook. General ticket sales at Ticketron, Liberty and Mutual agencies, as well as the Long Beach Arena box office, went on sale Wednesday with a price range of from $12 to $35.

The Long Beach Grand Prix Association has contracted for reserved grandstand and bleacher seating for 92,205 spectators, an increase of approximately 30,000 seats over that available at last September's Formula 5,000 race. "With a little effort we should be able to accommodate 100,000 spectators," said Pook.

Ragtime close to sailing win

MANZANILLO, Mex. (AP)—The 62-foot yacht Ragtime had a 50-mile lead in the San Diego-to-Manzanillo yacht race Saturday and had a chance to win the slow-starting race by this morning.

Ragtime, skippered by Bill White and Bill Pasquani out of the Long Beach Yacht Club, reported at the Saturday roll call that she was only 110 miles from the finish line.

Race officials estimated that Ragtime, twice winner of the Transpac race, could cross the finish line by midnight if the winds hold.

Fifty miles behind Ragtime was the 61-footer Joli from the San Diego Yacht Club. Joli is sailing without her skipper, Nick Frazee, who left the boat two days ago to fly home because of illness in his family.

The rest of the fleet, which left San Diego Jan. 31, was approximately 250 miles from the finish line off the Manzanillo jetty.

U.S. gains finals

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP)—The United States, with Ty Stofflet striking out 12, defeated defending champion Canada 1-0 Saturday and gained the final of the World Softball Championships. Although losing, Canada previously qualified to meet New Zealand in the other semifinal. But rain postponed the semifinals until today.

Earlier Saturday, New Zealand topped Japan 2-0.

LEMON WILL HELP ROAST REARDON

Newest baseball Hall of Famer Bob Lemon will be on hand Tuesday night to roast Beans Reardon when the former major league umpire is inducted into the Long Beach Century Club Hall of Fame.

Roastmaster will be Chuck Stevens, former major league first baseman and present secretary of the Association of Professional Ballplayers of America.

Former major leaguers who will participate in the festivities include Bobby Sturgeon, Jerry Priddy, Manny Perez and Bert Shepard, onetime Washington Senator pitcher who played with an artificial leg after a World War II injury.

Among active players in attendance will be Bob Bailey of the Cardinals, Tony Muser of the Orioles and Davey Lopes of the Dodgers, along with Harry Minor, New York Mets' scouting supervisor.

The open-to-the-public affair will be held at Adolphs Restaurant in the Queensway Hilton. Reservations can be secured Monday through Dick Bowdey (427-7466).

Masters swim meet on tap next Sunday

More than 150 swimmers ages 20 to 75 are expected to compete next Sunday in the Long Beach Masters Invitational at Belmont Plaza Olympic Pool.

The event will involve men and women swimmers from as far away as northern California, most preparing for the Short Course Nationals at Mission Viejo in May.

Competition will be in five-year age groups and will include all basic strokes at distances of 50 to 400 yards, plus a 200 yard freestyle relay.

L.B. women athletes face shift to CIF

By ELAINE RISINGER
Staff Writer

A change in directions for girls' athletics is under way in Long Beach. Beginning in September, young women participating in the interscholastic sports program offered by the five senior high schools will shift competition from the local Vinnie G. Eaton League to CIF.

At this point, six sports have been tentatively listed for CIF play—volleyball, basketball, softball, swimming, tennis and badminton.

Margaret Cloonan, consultant for girls' physical education in the Long Beach Unified School District, announced this week that the decision came as the result of a ruling made in the summer of 1974 by the CIF, state governing body for high school athletics. This regulation requires all districts participating in CIF to include girls and boys in the program.

Many districts in the state joined during the

1974-75 and 1975-76 seasons. Long Beach was one of the larger districts to resist.

"One reason we wanted to stay out was because we thought we had more autonomy and flexibility (within our own league). However, if these are the rules, we will comply, and we'll do a good job of it," Cloonan said.

"The CIF, without a doubt, is performing a tremendous service in opening opportunities in districts where there were no opportunities. However, in our particular situation—because we have been blessed with money, facilities and an administrative attitude promoting girls' athletics—the CIF is simply another direction we are taking. We don't particularly see it as point of fact it will limit us on the number of participants."

THE RAPID growth in women's sports in recent years has brought a variety of questions to the forefront. The Long Beach supervisor raised a few of these as she discussed the upcoming change.

"In truth, while it will be viewed by many people as an expansion and an extension of girls in sports, we will be able to meet the needs of fewer kids. Because of the higher level of competition, it will mean we will have to think in terms of varsity and junior varsity teams rather than many teams.

There is only so much money and so much (coaching) talent.

She continued, "If you look at competitive programs, they are really programs for athletically gifted children only. The average youngster gets lost because there are not enough other kinds of opportunities open to him."

"As Americans, we become spectators in this country, and yet we continue to create sports programs that are nothing but spectator amusement. You read articles, 'Let's be participants, not spectators,' yet we continue to put the coaching emphasis on the highly skilled few and then fill up a grandstand."

Margaret Davis, head of the girls' program for the CIF, doesn't feel CIF necessarily limits a school. "If a school fields interscholastic teams and has a regular set schedule, the two top teams would be considered varsity and junior varsity and CIF teams," she said. "Anything below that does not have to follow CIF regulations in uniforms, equipment, insurance, medical or whatever."

"There are schools in Orange County that have as many as 10 to 15 lesser ranked teams, and they play a limited schedule. It continues to give them broad participation which is what their particular physical educators want to see. A school can set it up pretty much as it likes. Both options are open. It just depends on what the teachers and principals want to support in their schools."

Besides, she adds, "providing competition for the talented athlete is no different from offering advanced math and English classes for the academically gifted."

BOTH Margaret Cloonan and Margaret Davis agree financing will have to be increased to participate in the CIF. CIF dues (eight cents for every student) have been collected for years. "Girls have been paying without getting any program," Margaret Davis said.

The biggest budget considerations will be in salaries of coaches (for more and extended practice periods), transportation, officiating and equipment.

"Schools are feeling the dollar pinch," the Long Beach consultant said. "The boys have had to take a really good look at budget. There is tremendous interest in volleyball and soccer. Many community groups would like to have these played inter-scholastically, but there is only so much money to spread so far. The school district has had to take a stand that they can not afford to expand the boys' program at this time under the real budget crisis in public education."

She added that equalizing expenditures between the boys' and the girls' program as required by the federal government could affect the boys' budget. "Title 9 is very, very definitive. Equal opportunity and equitable expenditure of resources. That doesn't mean that it has to be five cents here and five cents there, but how are you going to make it equitable if there is only so much money in the school budget?"

Monies available will be a factor in retaining a competitive program for any young woman who wishes to participate. "Ideally, we would like to retain an intramural program which would not be as hotly competitive as the interscholastic."

MISS DAVIS, at CIF, foresees the development of a strong intramural program. "When the girls start coming on strong, and Title 9 is going to allow it, schools are not going to be able to afford three, four or five teams for boys in each sport. They are going to have to cut back to probably just two—two for boys and two for girls—and then to fill the gap, a strong intramural program is going to have to be developed."

Concluding, Margaret Cloonan again praised Title 9 and CIF for the opportunities they have opened up where needed. "In looking to the future, it will be very interesting to see how girls' athletics develops... women are questioning the superimposing of the men's game plan. It works fine for the men, but why should we have to simply duplicate and live under it?"

Trojans meet Crowley Monday

Rod Dedeaux's USC baseball team, which has won six successive Pacific-8 Conference titles and five of the last six NCAA championships meets the Crowley All-Stars Monday afternoon at 2:30 on Dedeaux Field. Performing for the Crowley team will be former Trojans Steve Kemp (Detroit's recent signee), Don Buford, Roy Smalley and Ed Putman.

Kemp's grand slam home run paced USC major league alumni to a 9-3 win over the Trojans in a Jan. 24 game.

INDEPENDENT PRESS TELEGRAM
ORANGE COUNTY EVENING NEWS AND INDEPENDENTS

Speraw saw evolution ahead—got aboard

A man who took an innovative look at real estate sales technique early in his career made a quantum jump into success four years ago.

Long Beach's Oliver (Ollie) Speraw said at first, "Who needs it," when he was approached by the unknown and just-incorporated company Century 21 in November 1971.

But as he studied the evolution taking place in real estate he realized that most brokers did not have the time and every skill required to compete successfully against large chain companies beginning to dominate the field.

HIS CAREFUL consideration is now worth $9 million daily sales volume.

A month later he bought the first master franchise sold by Century 21. It covered southwest Los Angeles County from the Orange County line to Mulholland Drive and from the Santa Ana Freeway to the ocean.

Speraw opened in the Long Beach area April 9.

Now he has 88 member offices in his region and is adding new ones at a four-a-month clip.

From the beginning Century 21 has opened in 19 states plus Canada and is due to be in 28 states by the end of the year.

THERE ARE 1,900 total offices of which

OLLIE SPERAW

260 are in the Long Beach-Los Angeles-Orange County area with the $9 million daily volume.

Speraw, who also sits on the parent company's board, said it is adding 100 offices a month with a goal of 6,000 nationwide.

"Our success is hinged on the fact that our services to member brokers and their sales forces earn many times more than the prices they pay.

"Each member office is benefitted by the millions of dollars in promotion, recruiting assistance, superior sales training force, varied communication devices and sales tools, a national referral service plus management training and counseling," he said.

IN ANOTHER break with the norm he induced Dr. William Kroske, a clinical psychologist and real estate broker to leave his successful real estate counseling business and join Century 21.

Dr. Kroske's first move was to include a "personality profile" as part of the Century 21 real estate licensing school course. This enables the student to learn his selling strengths and how to increase his success.

Century 21's president, Art Bartlett, said that "most of the sales tools and systems designed by Speraw are used across the U.S. today. We are using him to write and design our sales manual to be available to all member brokers."

Speraw is working also on a computerized escrow and management system which will ultimately place a computer terminal in every Century 21 office providing eight management services, including complete escrow service any time on any day of the week.

WHERE DID Speraw start?

First, he was a general contractor in 1947 and worked with civic groups, including presidency of the Long Beach Jaycees and then to three five-year terms on Long Beach's Water Commission.

Then it was real estate in 1955, plus teaching at City College on real estate from law to investments.

He formed Sparow Realty in 1964 and concentrated on recruiting and training in addition to working with communication devices.

His sales force had 50 per cent less turnover and achieved three times more production than his most successful competitors.

He was recognized by the 50,000-member California Association of Realtors for first place for "Office Design and Layout" in 1965 and a first in 1966 for "Business Getting Devices."

While Congress just started requiring that all costs be disclosed to buyers in advance, Speraw was requiring his sales force to do so accurately in the '50s.

Then he recognized the need for franchising and his late '71-'72 decision tells the story today.

If you ask him "What's new?" generally he has good answers — most of the time a new one.

SKETCH SHOWS HOW SUMMIT LAKE HOMES ARE NESTLED HIGH IN ANAHEIM HILLS

SPECTACULAR PANORAMIC VIEW Second phase of Summit Lake homes in Anaheim Hills begun

Although just opened a few previewing weeks, more than 75% of the homes in phase one have been sold at the patio home Lake Summit development as it opens its second sales phase. The prices, from $50,900, represent the lowest-priced single-family patio homes available in the Anaheim Hills area, sales counselors Walker & Lee report.

The sales aides say "Each unit in the first phase features a spectacular panoramic view of the surrounding Anaheim Hills countryside as well as Orange County.

Terry O'Neill, Walker & Lee sales manager, points out the homes are individual, single-family patio structures on their own lots, with no common walls shared by neighboring units. They are not condominiums, townhomes, townhouses or apartment homes.

LAKE SUMMIT, a project of S.I.R. Developers Inc., eventually will be comprised of 150 view-oriented homes on 35 acres in master-planned Anaheim Hills. Total community valuation is more than $8.7 million dollars. Prices range from $50,900 to $67,900 and are set amid homes valued at more than $100,000.

The first and second phases will be followed by increments of 40 and a final group of 43 homes. Phase one occupancy is scheduled now. Construction of the second phase is in progress, and reservations are being taken.

A maintenance-free, leisure lifestyle will apply, Solomon said, because a professional firm will be retained by the homeowners association to maintain landscaped front yards, neighborhood common areas and recreational facilities.

Walker & Lee also pointed out that Lake Summit offers the "zero side yard" building concept, in which the unit is placed at one side of the lot, thereby eliminating the normally wasted side yard area.

Lake Summit homes are offered in three or four bedrooms with four floor plans and 12 exterior styles. One and two story units contain 1,350 to 1,910 square feet. The largest unit is the San Moritz, a four-bedroom, 2½ bath, 2 story unit, with a powder room and full bath on the lower level plus a third bath and three bedrooms on the second level. Also on the ground level is a deluxe equipped kitchen with patio serving bar, nook area, family room, spacious living-dining room, and master bedroom suite. Laundry facilities are in the attached two-car garage.

Lake Summit homes include continuous cleaning gas range and oven, trash compactors, dishwashers and disposals, luminous kitchen ceilings, custom oak cabinets with full length rollers and door guides, built-in pantries and carpeting throughout, including the living room, dining room, all bedrooms, hall, stairways and closets.

ALSO FEATURED are custom fireplaces, wood shake roofs, ceramic tile entries, lifetime concrete walks and drives, full insulation, automatic garage door openers, copper plumbing, solid copper electrical wiring, cathedral ceilings, custom cabinetry, and a smoke detector system.

Community facilities include a large swimming pool and cabana, whirlpool jacuzzi bath, regulation size tennis court, hiking trails and mini-parks.

Four furnished model homes decorated by Bonnie Cunningham of Newport Beach are open daily from 11 a.m. daily and from 10 a.m. on weekends. They are at 959 South Lake Summit Drive, just north of Serrano Avenue at the top of Anaheim Hills Road. From the Riverside Freeway, exit on Imperial Highway and go south to Santa Ana Canyon Road. Then go east to Anaheim Hills Road, and south again to the top of the hill and Serrano Drive. Then left on Serrano.

L.B. townhomes' location stressed

Its ideal location in Long Beach has been one of the important sales factors at Country Club Gardens, the new luxury adult townhome community by Sterling Development Corp., according to Norm Meager, vice president of the building firm.

Situated in the Virginia Country Club neighborhood, one of the prime residential areas of Long Beach, the townhomes are a short freeway drive from employment and metropolitan centers of Los Angeles and Orange County.

The exclusive development is also close to recreation of all kinds, including the Los Cerritos Park and tennis courts, Lakewood Golf and Tennis Club and world-famous beaches and marinas.

MEAGER NOTED that more than 65% of the new homeowners at Country Club Gardens are professional people and 20% own their own businesses. Among these are several doctors, a dentist, an architect, engineers, teachers and a banker, as well as many engaged in scientific professions.

Country Club Gardens has just 72 elegant, split-level townhomes priced from $53,350 with excellent conventional financing. Lush green gardens with waterfalls, streams, bridges and reflection lakes surround the homes.

The environmental landscaping includes winding, lighted walkways and drives and a large free-form swimming pool, jacuzzi and night-lighted paddle tennis courts are provided in the private recreation areas.

Rustic contemporary exteriors of the homes have been designed in keeping with the area's fine homes and feature custom architectural detailing and cedar shake roofs. Each home has a trellised entry, private garden patio and over-sized two car garage with laundry area and automatic door opener.

Innovative floor plans of the Country Club Gardens homes offer from 1,328 to 1,600 square feet of living area with three bedrooms or three bedrooms and den, both with two baths.

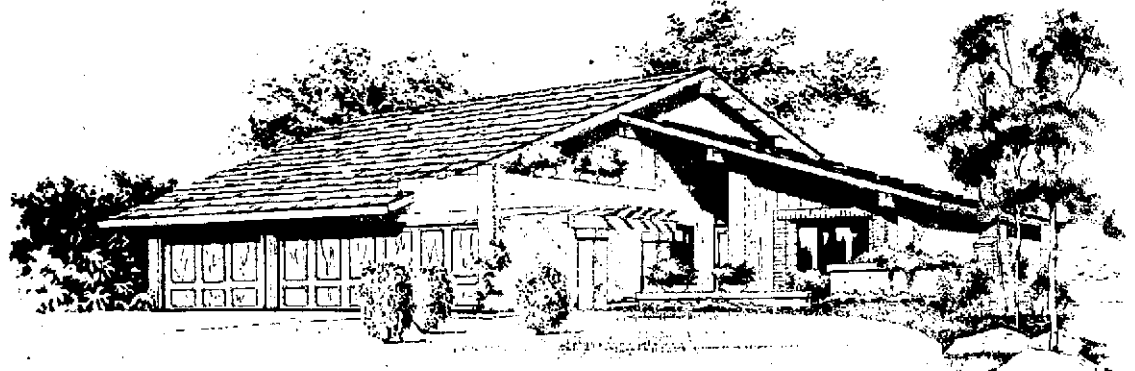

Appointments include designer fireplaces (two in larger models), atrium balconies, formal dining rooms, dramatic large living rooms, cathedral ceilings and wood parquet entry foyers.

THERE ARE spacious master suites and convenience-planned kitchens with deluxe Tappan appliances, pantries and luminous ceilings. Ceramic tiling and wall-to-wall carpeting are more luxury features.

Immediate occupancy is now available at the new townhome community. The sales office and model homes are open daily from 10 a.m. at 3655 Country Club Drive and Cedar Avenue.

Country Club Gardens may be reached by taking the San Diego Freeway to the Long Beach Boulevard exit, then north on Long Beach Boulevard to 36th Street and west on 36th (which becomes Country Club Drive) for one-quarter mile to Cedar Avenue and the townhome development.

RURAL SETTING IN ORANGE CITY La Linda offers patio lifestyle

ARTIST'S CONCEPT OF A LA LINDA PATIO-STYLE HOME IN CITY OF ORANGE

La Linda Homes officially has opened two new furnished models in the City of Orange. The community consists of 24 individual, patio-styled homes in a rural setting within walking distance of the Bullocks-Fashion Square shopping and financial complex. Although barely beyond the preview stage, and for sale just a few weeks, 15 of the 24 units have been sold.

The $1.5 million dollar, 6-acre, planned-unit development is being built by Orange County developer Richard Hall.

Although they are individual, detached homes, the patio-home concept will apply. All common properties will be maintained by a professional firm through a homeowners association for a monthly fee of approximately $35.

ALMOST ALL the one and two story homes feature a different exterior style that give the overall community a custom look, says Hall. Measuring in size from 1550 to approximately 2100 square feet, the units are available in four floor-plan arrangements. They contain three to five bedrooms, and two or three baths.

Architect for the firm was Roy Kiter and Associates, Newport Beach. Prices will range from $56,950 to $69,950, with conventional financing. Occupancy is planned by mid-February.

A leisure lifestyle will be provided residents in their own, huge 25 by 50 foot swimming pool, a recreation building, shuffleboard court and two huge professionally maintained park areas.

The community is accessible via a single entrance off Palmyra Street, west of Main Street. The homes are clustered architecturally in two oversized cul-de-sac streets. Huge palm, mature cedar, elm, podocarpus, pine and liquid amber trees were preserved in their natural state, creating a rural atmosphere. A decorative block wall along the Palmyra Street frontage will add privacy. Perimeter wood fencing will enclose the site.

Hall said this is the most complete family home he has built to date. Features included in the purchase price are carpeting in the living room, dining room, all bedrooms and hallways, draperies, central air conditioning, fireplaces, mirrored wardrobe doors, decorator wall paper, rear and side-yard fencing, front-yard landscaping with sprinklers, deluxe equipped kitchens with trash compactors and Nutone food centers, sunken bathtubs and smoke detector systems.

"WITH ALL THESE FEATURES included, the purchaser may move in and begin enjoying complete luxury living immediately," Hall said. This package of features will practically eliminate after move-in costs the builder added.

Some plans feature wet bars, walk-in closets, and formal dining rooms. Three have built-in service and laundry rooms.

In addition to either two or three car garages, 21 additional open parking spaces are provided for residents, and/or guest parking.

Just five minutes away are the Santa Ana Freeway, Orange Freeway, Garden Grove Freeway and the Newport Freeway.

From the Santa Ana Freeway the project may be visited by exiting north on Main Street just beyond Bullocks to Palmyra and west two blocks to the site.

$1.5 million housing OK'd for Poly area

Shapell Government Housing, a major subsidiary of Shapell Industries, Inc., has been selected by the City of Long Beach to develop a government subsidized family housing project totaling $1.5 million.

With construction currently under way, the 78-unit family apartment complex is being built under the FHA 236 program subsidized by HUD.

Located in the Poly High Redevelopment Area, the family-oriented community will offer spacious one to three bedroom apartments, including distinctive studio designs in the three bedroom units.

With each apartment featuring a private balcony or patio, rents will start at $130.27 per month, including all utilities. The community also will feature extensive landscaping, volleyball and basketball courts, and laundry and storage facilities.

"We are very pleased to have been selected for the development of this project," stated Elliott Maltzman, president of Shapell Government Housing

Low move-in costs for townhomes

The "Buy-Centennial" starts today at Presidential Heights. Douglass-Pacific Corporation's view-site townhome community in prestigious South San Clemente, according to Alfred B. Osterhues, executive vice president of the building firm.

The unique home purchase plan, described as "a revolutionary way to buy a home," includes low move-in costs of just $1,176 (with approved credit).

THERE ARE just 64 of the new luxury townhomes to choose from at the popular hilltop community, Osterhues noted. Prices begin at $39,990 for the two and three bedroom homes with 1½ to 2½ baths.

Five distinctive floor plans are available in one and two story stylings of Spanish-textured stucco with massive wood beams and shake roofs. There are sheltered entry courtyards, private patios, atrium/patios and upper level balconies in various models.

Interiors feature outdoor-view living and dining areas, elegant master suites with cathedral ceilings, deluxe built-in kitchens, wall-to-wall carpeting and more luxuries throughout.

Some of the most spectacular views in the entire Presidential Heights community are available in the last group of homes being offered in the new "Hilltop Series," Osterhues noted.

More than half of the secluded development's 292 acres is devoted to open space, with a swimming pool provided for each cluster of homes and a total of 13 pools in the community.

A private entrance is protected by a card-operated security gate.

The leisure-oriented, maintenance-free community is within minutes of ocean beaches and Dana Point Marina, shopping, schools and complete community services in San Clemente.

IMMEDIATE occupancy is now available and the homes are being offered with a special "10-Year Homeowner's Warranty Program" covering defects in workmanship or materials on such items as plumbing and electrical conduits. Presidential Heights is the first Orange County development to offer the insurance-type program.

Five furnished models are open daily from 10 a.m. at Presidential Heights and the development may be easily reached by taking the San Diego Freeway to the El Camino Real exit in San Clemente, then south to Avenida San Gabriel. Turn left and go four blocks to Presidential Heights.

ers Jim and Al Baldwin. Within the Brea North Hills residential development, the $53,000 park was built and paid for by The Baldwin Co. Jeff and Lance and their families live nearby, will be among the first residents in the new community.

Mini-park welcomed by Brea

Brea's newest park, an as yet unnamed mini-park on Woodcrest Avenue between Wardman Drive and Cedarcrest Drive, was officially opened recently by city officials and representatives of The Baldwin Co., the Irvine-based development firm that built the park.

Among those attending the informal ceremonies were Brea City Councilmen Rex Gaede and Carol Weddle; Planning Commissioners John Sutton, Ken Witt and Dick Bassey and Recreation and Parks Commissioner Gene Leyton. Also, participating were Al and Jim Baldwin, principals of The Baldwin Co., which is developing the adjacent residential community of North Hills Tennis and Swim Club Homes.

Jim Baldwin stated: "Mini-parks serve an important community need, providing recreation which families can enjoy without having to get in their car and drive a distance."

The one-third acre park includes a large wooden free-form jungle-gym, barbeques, and picnic tables. Built at the expense of The Baldwin Co., the park with its equipment and landscaping — is valued at over $53,000.

Brea North Hills is the first Orange County development of the Baldwin Co.

Architectural exhibit set up

A photographic exhibition of award-winning projects designed by architects affiliated with the Orange County Chapter of the American Institute of Architects will be on view at the Whittier office of Home Savings and Loan Association, 15625 E. Whittier Blvd., Feb. 16 through March 12.

First honor awards in the biennial competition, which attracted 84 entries, went to Bissell/August Associates for their 190 Building, Newport Center, and for designing Lido Village, also in Newport Beach. The 190 Building houses both a Home Savings branch and the Bissell/August offices.

The awards program, conducted by the Orange County Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture, honors architects for excellence in design of projects executed by chapter members only.

A PANEL OF THREE judges, outside the Orange County area, was reviewed by the entries. They were Daniel L. Dworsky, FAIA, recipient of 10 awards from the A.I.A., including a National Honor Award for the UCLA Multipurpose Track and Field Facility; Frank O. Gehry, F.A.I.A., current director of the A.I.A. in Washington D.C., and a member of the Committee on Design; and Deborah Sussman, acknowledged for her design of retail interior spaces.

Bissell/August took a First Honor Award for Lido Village, a waterfront, urban redevelopment project in Newport Beach, by the Don Koll Co. In this local haunt and tourist attraction, Bissell/August transformed nondescript commercial and apartment buildings into a sparkling shopping mall.

THE 190 BUILDING, recipient of the other first honor, houses Bissell/August's offices and is shared by Home Savings. Here, the design goal was economical efficiency, flexibility and environmental harmony.

On presenting the award, the judges' commented that the 190 Building is an example of a strong statement made without complexity. Both the interior and exteriors of the architects' offices are award-winners.

Photographs of award of merit and honorable mention projects are included in the exhibition. Awards of merit were presented to Bissell/August for the 280 Building, in Newport Center, to Rolly Pulaski and Associates for the Cannery Restaurant; and to Bissell/August for the Coto de Casa Condominiums.

Two-day building meet set

Some of the West Coast's most knowledgeable building and real estate experts will spearhead a conference Feb. 19-20, sponsored by San Diego State University's Office of Continuing Education.

MacElhenny Jr., president of MacElhenny, Levy & Co., of Santa Barbara; William Mitchell, president, Market Profiles, Santa Ana; Sanford R. Goodkin, president, Sanford R. Goodkin Co.

Walker & Lee's home sales up

Paced by "spectacular" December sales gains, Walker & Lee, Inc., Anaheim-based real estate services firm, reports fourth quarter property sales "increased dramatically" over the preceding year.

"Our sales during the fourth quarter of 1975 increased 62 per cent in terms of units and 114 per cent in dollar volume over last year," announced William O. Thagard, president.

Property sales in the quarter totaled 2,103 transactions for $104.8 million, increases of 802 sales and $55.9 million. New and used home sales were up almost equal amounts, of 95 and 90 per cent, respectively.

"If last month is any indication of what 1976 will be like, we're really going to have a great year," Thagard observed. "Our December 1975 property sales dollar volume was up 317 per cent over the same month in '74. New home sales and resales leaped up almost identical percentages during the month."

Thagard stressed that all Walker & Lee sales figures are "net, after deducting cancellations."

In addition to property sales, Walker & Lee also provides residential research and consulting services and has escrow, mortgage, and insurance subsidiaries which show parallel increases.

Landmark deducts moving costs

The current $1000 allowance program in effect at La Mirada Landmark may be used in a number of ways, reports sales counselor Frank Randak.

He advised that the allowance or a portion of it could be applied toward the purchasers' moving costs. Randak has arranged with the Bekins Moving and Storage Co. to provide moving services to purchasers who decide to use their allowance that way. Details on this special program are available at the sales center.

To be continued on a limited time basis, purchasers in the second phase can still receive the allowance of $750 to $1,000 when purchasing a new home. The allowance also may be used to upgrade carpeting, add draperies, wardrobe mirrors, or may be applied toward the closing cost requirement.

Ninety units comprise this second unit and 30 are still available at 1975 prices that range from $35,950 to $47,950.

Major shopping complexes such as Whittwood, La Mirada Mall, and Fashion Square, health and medical centers, churches of all denominations, and numerous other employment and recreational opportunities are within a few minutes drive.

La Mirada also provides a unique energy saving service now being studied by other cities nationwide. This is the Dial-a-Ride mini-bus service which picks riders up at their doors and takes them anywhere in the city.

The security of residents is enhanced by a 24-hour-a-day security guard at the entrance to the project.

The entry is off Santa Gertrudes Street between Imperial Highway and Rosecrans Avenue. It may be reached from the Santa Ana Freeway by taking the Imperial Highway exit east to Santa Gertrudes and turning south.

La Mirada Landmark is a project of Glenwood Properties, Inc., which is owned by Signal Landmark Properties Inc., and Chevron Land Co.

The sales office and model complex are open daily from 10 a.m. for information phone (714) 521-2440 or (213) 947-2505.

Butler plans 550 single-family units

Another strong vote of confidence in the home-buying public was registered this week when Butler Housing Corp., the Irvine residential builder/developer, announced construction plans involving 550 single-family homes for 1976.

"We believe that the single-family market has returned," stated Merrill Butler Jr., president. "The overall market has bottomed-out, and with the start of 1976 construction and sales should really pick up. The trend is definitely toward the single-family market, especially well-designed homes in good locations.

"A NEW DILEMMA faces the industry," warned Butler. "The industry may not be able to meet the demands. With ever-increasing city and local requirements placed on the developers and the rising cost of labor, the building industry is going to have difficulty in delivering houses that the average family can afford."

Butler Housing plans to start 550 single-family homes during 1976. This includes additions to existing projects, as well as the start of six new developments.

Sales awards won by 6 at Warmington

Six Warmington Development, Inc. sales people, who together achieved total real estate sales of $24 million in 1975, are recipients of annual Million Dollar Awards from the Sales and Marketing Council, Building Industry Association of California.

The honorees, each of whom recorded $1 million or more in sales at various Warmington projects in Orange County, are Beth Elekes, Tom Clark, Robert Roeder, Larry Maurice, Gerald Malmberg and Chet Kruzell.

"We are extremely proud to have had so many of our staff members receive awards," Gene Barrow, marketing director for Warmington Development, said. "The Million Dollar Award program is an outstanding opportunity for sales people to gain well deserved recognition for their individual performances."

"With such activities, the Sales and Marketing Council creates incentives, a forum for meeting with colleagues and an opportunity for gaining an insight into the market," Barrow noted, "and Warmington Development supports their programs with enthusiasm."

Marketing meet slated

A two-day marketing session, open to the public and designed to create ideas and expose real estate investment properties to brokers and clients, is being offered by the investment division of the California Association of Realtors.

The International Hotel, 1800 Palm Canyon Drive in Palm Springs, will be the site of the session Friday and Saturday, Feb. 13 and 14. Realtor Midge Davis of Newport Beach will be session director.

EASTRIDGE ESTATES HOME IN ITS RUSTIC SETTING

Eastridge Estates homes feature hilltop location

A spectacular hilltop location high above the championship Anaheim Hills Golf Course is the setting for Eastridge Estates, a new $5.6 million community of 87 luxury single-family residences at Serrano Avenue and Lake Summit Drive in Anaheim Hills, which has held its grand opening.

Phase I of Eastridge Estates, a group of 40 single and two-story homes with three to six bedrooms, is nearly completed and will be available for occupancy in February, according to Socaland Corp. of Tustin, builder of the new community.

Prior to the grand opening, 20 of the new Eastridge Estates homes had been sold and construction on the second phase is scheduled to begin this month.

Eastridge Estates offers seven floor plans in a price range of $84,550 to $79,900. Living space in the luxury dwellings spans 1,700 to 2,900 square feet. Lot sizes in the 26-acre Anaheim Hills neighborhood average 11,000 square feet.

Five professionally decorated models, named in honor of historical figures in a salute to the American Bicentennial, are open daily from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and weekends, 10 a.m. to dusk.

Eastridge Estates is located within the 4,200-acre master-planned Anaheim Hills, one of the West's most successful "new town" communities. In addition to the 18-hole golf course, the Anaheim Hills Racquet Club and forthcoming Equestrian Center provide unusual sports potential for the active family.

ANAHEIM HILLS also affords its residents five miles of riding and hiking trails as well as an oak-studded natural park.

Eastridge Estates complements the environmental aesthetics of the area with a large selection of 23 exterior elevations, cedar shake roofs or optional colored tile roofs, textured stucco accented with brick and extensive wood trim, concrete parking surfaces and walkways and underground utilities.

Luxury interior design appointments encompass step-down and step-up rooms; open volume, sloped ceilings in major rooms; wood-burning fireplaces with log lighters; formal dining areas; family rooms with sliding glass door patio access; and, in selected models, built-in wet bars.

Eastridge Estates kitchen conveniences include built-in microwave ovens, all-electric ovens and ranges, ceramic tile counters, recessed luminous ceilings, pantry cabinets, three-compartment cast-iron sinks, hardwood kitchen cabinets with sculptured doors and self-closing hinges, built-in water lines to refrigerators and sliding pass-thru windows to patio counter bars.

To visit Eastridge Estates, exit the Riverside Freeway at Imperial Highway, drive south to Nohl Ranch Road and east to Serrano Avenue and Lake Summit Drive.

What's Your Problem?

Points on house sale could help the seller

By DON CAMPBELL

Money moves in mysterious ways, and rarely more so than in the buying and selling of real estate where, in Washington, D.C., a string is pulled and the side-effects ripple out 3,000 miles to every corner of the land.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

I am about ready to sell my house and was encouraged last month when the government lowered the FHA and VA rates because I thought this would mean that "points" would be eliminated — which, as I understand it, I have to pay. Now, though, I find out that it doesn't mean that, at all. I still have to pay points, so I don't see any advantage at all for me in this. Am I right? — Mr. S. V. C., Hartford, Conn.

ANSWER: That's an unduly gloomy look at the situation, I think.

Like death and taxes, it seems like "points" are going to be with us forever as long as the government pegs FHA and VA mortgage interest rates at a lower level than those prevailing for conventional mortgages.

And, unlike the situation that prevails with conventional mortgages, it is the seller who must pay the lender these points — or discount — when the mortgage is closed. On conventional financing, that is, it's the buyer who pays the points.

What's a "point"? Essentially, it's one percentage point of the selling price of the house.

Its function is to close the gap (for the lender) between the maximum interest rate that the FHA and VA will allow on government-insured homes — recently lowered from 9 per cent to 8.75 per cent — and what the lender could get on his money financing the same home on the open market.

What the recent drop in FHA and VA rates did, then, was to raise the points from about two to three — or, in the case of a $36,000 home, from a lump-sum payment of $725 to about $1,170 on the part of the seller.

Now, as the seller, this means that you're either going to have to raise the asking price on your home to cover this point-spread, or simply absorb it. And, from this standpoint, you're right in assuming that the change in the rate structure didn't do you any good; at all — it could mean that you may be pricing your house out of the market.

But, on the other hand, it COULD work to your advantage by making financing available to would-be buyers who otherwise wouldn't be able to consider your house seriously. You've got to look at the bright side, too.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

Sometime ago you mentioned a "Home Owners Sales Kit" and gave the price and the address where it could be gotten. I sent away, but my envelope came back stamped "Unknown." Is this some kind of a rip-off? — Mr. W.F.T. (Hartford, Conn.)

ANSWER: There's certainly nothing, to my knowledge, that would suggest that it's a rip-off. It's more a case of having run up against an absent-minded professor.

The correct address is: "Home Owners Sales Kit," in care of Richard C. Vreeland, Box 91, Station A., Univ. of Southern Mississippi, Hattiesburg, Miss. 39401.

SHORT MOVE FOR FAMILY

Their 2nd Shadow Run home

La Palma residents Lou and Carolyn Einung and son Ronny have moved into their second Warmington Development, Inc., home, a new single-family residence in the company's Shadow Run community in La Palma.

Four years ago, the Einungs bought a town-home in Warmington's first Smoke Tree development in La Palma. Their recommendations also brought five other buyers to the community.

Since then, their property has appreciated 1½ times in value, adding to the couple's satisfaction and pleasure in owning a Warmington home, according to Gene Barrow, director of marketing for the building firm (who also sold them their first home).

READY TO MOVE up to a larger, single family home, Lou and Carolyn selected the popular Shadow Run series recently introduced in a choice La Palma residential area not far from Smoke Tree.

Success of the Shadow Run series is attributed by the marketing director to the outstanding dollar value of the homes and their prime residential locations.

The new La Palma development is at Moody and La Palma Avenues and offers five distinctive one and two-story plans priced from $55,190 to $66,990.

The spacious family-oriented homes feature three or four bedrooms and two baths with from 1,506 to 2,403 square feet, available in 12 unique elevations.

SHADOW RUN homes feature an exclusive design concept that enables homeowners to enjoy family, formal or private living in separate sectors. Highlighting the

GENE BARROW, RIGHT, WELCOMES EINUNGS TO NEW HOME

Shadow Run lifestyle are custom-styled appointments and a long list of included features.

There are vaulted ceilings, massive fireplaces, open staircases and an abundance of sliding glass doors. Various plans have wet bars and extra large pantry areas, walk-in closets and huge finished bonus rooms.

Elegant master suites feature compartmented private baths and deluxe Shadow Run kitchens are fully built-in and include ceramic tile counter tops. There are block fenced rear yards, double garages and wall-to-wall shag carpeting among the luxury features.

Shadow Run is within walking distance of schools at all grade levels and just minutes from shopping, entertainment, recreational and medical facilities. The new Los Cerritos Mall regional shopping center is also nearby and easy freeway access provides fast commuting to all major Los Angeles and Orange County employment centers.

Four furnished model homes are on display at the Shadow Run central sales facility at 7012 Somerset Circle, La Palma, and open daily from 10 a.m. to dusk. The sales office may be reached by taking Freeway 91 to the Carmenita turnoff, south on Carmenita to Orangethorpe (South Street) and left one block to Shadow Run/La Palma.

Condominiums
2nd phase sales near completion

Just eight units remain in the second phase at Huntington Landmark, the director of sales, Bill Markas, reports.

For a limited time, selected units will be made available as Houses-of-the-week, and will include custom draperies at no increase in the 1975 purchase prices.

These choice second unit condominium homes are also available for immediate occupancy. Prices are $32,990 and $33,990. The units contain two bedrooms, two full baths, formal dining area and large living room. A huge walk-in closet is also included off the master bedroom.

One hundred-eighty units comprise this second building phase at Huntington Landmark. Conventional financing is offered.

Each Huntington Landmark unit is allocated an enclosed garage with built in storage, as well as an additional parking space.

THE SALES PRICES include shag wall-to-wall carpeting in the living room, bedrooms and hallway, and efficient forced air heating. Other features are walk-in closets, deluxe equipped all-electric kitchens, and utility rooms within each unit that include washer-dryer.

A variety of recreational services are available at Huntington Landmark, and center around the million dollar recreation center. Facilities for social activities are provided in a large clubhouse that features dining card rooms, a billiard room, art studio, photo lab, pottery and wood shops and all purpose rooms.

THE CONDOMINIUM concept of carefree living is provided, with exterior maintenance, landscaping and care of the greenbelts and recreational facilities provided by a professional firm retained by the homeowner's association. The community has a 24-hour security guarded entrance.

New models are located on Magnolia Street just north of Atlanta Avenue. The sales center for phase 3 is open daily from 10 a.m., and information may be obtained by calling (714) 536-8847.

IP-T GRAND PRIX RACE GAME

Here's how to win:

The entry form to the right indicates the names of 30 race cars and their car numbers. What you must do is determine which cars will finish this week's race in first thru tenth place and indicate the car numbers on the entry form. To do this you will need to solve ten word puzzles that will appear daily in these newspapers, next Monday thru Friday. Each puzzle will show the finishing place of a car, the number of letters in that car's name plus the positioning of one or more of those letters. You fill in the blanks to discover the car's name. While some puzzles may appear to have more than one answer, when all ten are completed there will be only one correct solution. No car's name will be used more than once in this race.

NOTE: Indicate the race number you are entering on the outside of your envelope!

A NEW RACE BEGINS EACH SUNDAY!

TELEVISION LOG OF THE INDEPENDENT-PRESS-TELEGRAM AND THE EVENING NEWS

Nick Nolte knocks 'em dead in hard-hitting role

By BOB MARTIN
TV-Radio Editor

Nick Nolte, a relative newcomer to television, entered the homes of millions of Americans last Sunday and Monday nights with all the impact of a powerful uppercut to the jaw.

In ABC's nine-part, 12-hour "Rich Man, Poor Man" series, based on Irwin Shaw's best-selling novel, Nick is the "poor man" — a loser. But the drama is sure to make him a winner. It could, in fact, make him a major star.

After the first two episodes of two hours each had aired, Nolte was in the office of Hollywood publicist Frank Liberman last Tuesday. Phone calls were coming in from all over — from newspaper people, producers and what have you. One was from noted director Francis Ford Coppola, who asked Nick to drop by that afternoon to talk about a role in his Vietnam War epic motion picture "Apocalypse Now."

Of course, the young actor couldn't pass up an invitation like that, but all he had really wanted to do that day was to go ice skating for several hours. Why ice skating? Well, he has been offered a part in a Paul Newman movie about hockey, tentatively titled "Slapshot," and he wants to get in shape.

"I never played hockey and if I can't look like a hockey star I don't want the part," Nick told me between phone calls. Newman will play the hockey team's coach in the film to be directed by George Roy Hill.

AFTER FINISHING one phone call, the blond, blue-eyed actor took one from a newspaper woman in Ames, Iowa. Nick, it seems, lived both in Ames and Waterloo, Iowa, for a few years as a boy. He was born in Omaha and finished high school there, but in between he lived several other places, including even California.

"We moved around a lot — my father was a salesman," he said.

Nick took time to have lunch with Liberman and me at a Hamburger Hamlet, which was just a short walk from the publicity man's Sunset Boulevard office. He was tousle-haired and needed a shave and was dressed more for working on his five-acre ranch between Malibu and Ventura (purchased from his "Rich Man" earnings) than for giving the appearance of a TV star.

He was heavier, too, and looked older, with his blond mustache, than he did in the first two episodes of "Rich Man, Poor Man," as clean-shaven teenager Tom Jordache.

"I had to get down to about 165 pounds to look more youthful at the beginning of the picture," said the rugged 6-footer. "Then I put on weight and got up to 190 as I matured over a 20-year period. Luckily, the episodes were shot in sequence."

The actor, whose normal weight is around 175, limited himself to a cheeseburger, French fries and Coke for lunch.

He is, he pointed out, 35 years of age — which no doubt will surprise a lot of viewers, for he certainly can look much younger.

NOLTE, Peter Strauss (as his older brother, Rudy Jordache) and Susan Blakely, as Julie Prescott, a character encompassing several women in the novel, are the principals in the TV mini-series, which follows their lives from V-E Day in 1945 to the mid-sixties.

Rudy is scholarly, ambitious, dedicated, the favorite of his immigrant parents (played by Edward Asner and Dorothy McGuire). He goes from high school on to college and business and politics. He's the "rich man."

Nolte's Tom, on the other hand, is a rebellious, tough, independent, fun-loving fellow who feels unloved by his parents — a woman-chasing, two-fisted guy whose temper sometimes leads to violence.

In the first two episodes, at least, Tom Jordache had all the fun, and, Nolte admitted, the trouble-making but likable Tom was apt to appeal to more viewers than the strait-laced Rudy.

There's a scene in the first episode in which Nolte gets in a fight with Dick Butkus, the former great linebacker of pro football. It is a tribute to Nolte's acting ability and to his athletic appearance that it doesn't seem phony when he whips the big guy.

"You know, that part was supposed to go to Larry Csonka (another pro football star)," Nick told me, "but he didn't want it if he couldn't win the fight."

NICK NOLTE ... stars in 'Rich Man, Poor Man'

TOM JORDACHE also set a fire, slugged his bitter father and was kicked out of town in the first episode. In the second episode, he had some tender love scenes with the attractive Irish housekeeper (Fionnuala Elanagan) at his uncle's home in California, thereby getting in trouble with the uncle. He also was jailed on a statutory rape charge after getting a teen-aged girl named Teresa (Talia Shire) pregnant.

In the third episode, which will air from 10 to 11 p.m. Monday on Channel 7, Tom is lured into marriage by Teresa, has a son by her, and launches a promising career as a prizefighter. But later in the series, after Teresa has left him, Tom hits bottom and eventually moves to France, only to be overtaken, in the end, by violence. Rudy, meanwhile, has graduated from college and is moving up the business ladder.

Nolte was an all-around athlete in high school at Omaha, lettering in football, basketball, baseball, track and wrestling. His late father, Frank Nolte, was a star tackle for the Iowa State Cyclones in the mid-1930s. As a youth, Nick's goal was to be a professional athlete, and football ("I played defensive end and some quarterback and punted and kicked off") took him to Eastern Arizona Junior College, Pasadena City College and Arizona State.

Finally, he said, it dawned on him that he wasn't going to make it as a pro football player — "that maybe I was a step too slow." So he turned to the study of acting at Phoenix City College and Colorado State and with theater groups.

"Did acting come naturally to you?" I inquired.

Replied Nick: "It seemed right for me, somehow, from the start."

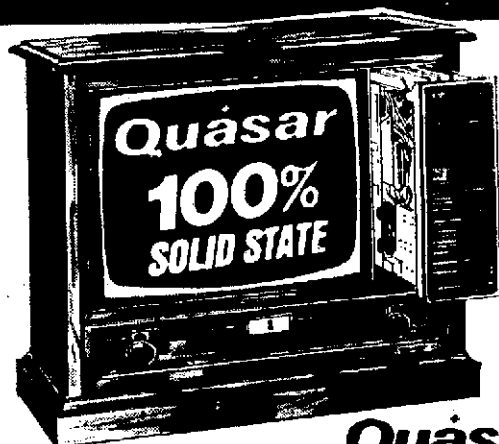

FROM 1962 to 1972, he performed in more than 150 plays in regional theaters from Arizona to Colorado to Minnesota to Illinois to New York to California. In the last few years, he has had guest roles on a number of TV series and has appeared in five theatrical motion pictures, starring in one of them — "Return to Macon County" — in 1975.

His annual income during some of his years in regional theater was only about $6,000, said Nolte, who is single but says he has "been living with the same girl about six years."

Things are looking up now, though. The poor man of "Rich Man" seems to have hit it big.

'You can't please everyone,' says network's censor

By MARILYNN PRESTON
Chicago Tribune

Johnny Carson calls him Priscilla Goodbody.

He is the NBC censor, the network vice president in charge of broadcast standards, and at a screening of "Barry Lyndon" the other night he was the only one counting up all the dirty parts.

He is the tastemaker general, the man who edited the breasts out of "The Godfather" but left them in on a recent "Today" show.

And if you want to complain — if you think the broom-rape in "Born Innocent" was too much and the family hour too little, if you enjoy Carson's filthy innuendoes but think "Saturday Night" makes too much fun of the handicapped, if you're tired of watching obscene violence and prefer obscene sex — Herminio Traviesas is the man to see.

I SAW HIM the other day when he was in town to talk to the Chicago TV Academy about how tough it is to be a creative editor, a term he much prefers to censor, which connotes something evil, negative and certainly repressive.

Untrue, says the 61-year-old broadcast veteran that Newsweek calls the "cherubic dean" of the censors and everyone else calls just plain Travvy.

"Let's face it — I have a tough job," he said. "When people sit there and ask me by what right do I play God, that really shakes me up. But if I've learned anything after 37 years in the business, it's that I can't win. I've got to go with my gut instinct and I can't please everyone."

RIGHT NOW, Traviesas and his fellow keepers of the bleepers at the other networks are very much displeasing the creative forces who work on television and claim the family hour is foolish, unfair, unconstitutional and probably responsible for the reported 5 per cent decline in adult prime-time viewers.

Traviesas says he can't specifically discuss any of those charges because he is involved in the federal suit pending against the networks, but he did want to make perfectly clear that NBC is solidly behind the family hour, and so is he. And so, in his opinion, are the majority of people in the country.

"Now a lot of people may disagree with me," says the man of strict Presbyterian upbringing (who first mouthed the now-famous phrase that NBC would never have "frontal, backal or sidal nudity"), "but I sincerely believe that the country is still basically puritanical."

HOW DOES he know? He just knows. He listens to his station managers and his staff of 40 who try to keep in touch with the hinterlands, and, most of all, he keeps track of the mail.

But, surprisingly enough, it appears to take very small amounts of mail to persuade him, in spite of the fact that the millions of people who accept a certain show rarely write while the vocal minority with complaints frequently do.

In one case, Traviesas says, it took just one intelligent letter by a woman married to a man named Bruce to convince him NBC should stop using Bruce as the all-purpose name to connote a homosexual.

"If they needed a name, I told them to use Herminio," he said.

ANOTHER time 100 callers, upset about Henry Fonda saying "damn" three times in the first reel of "Red Pony," got Traviesas to set an arbitrary rule that there should be no "hells" or "damns" in the first 15 minutes of a program.

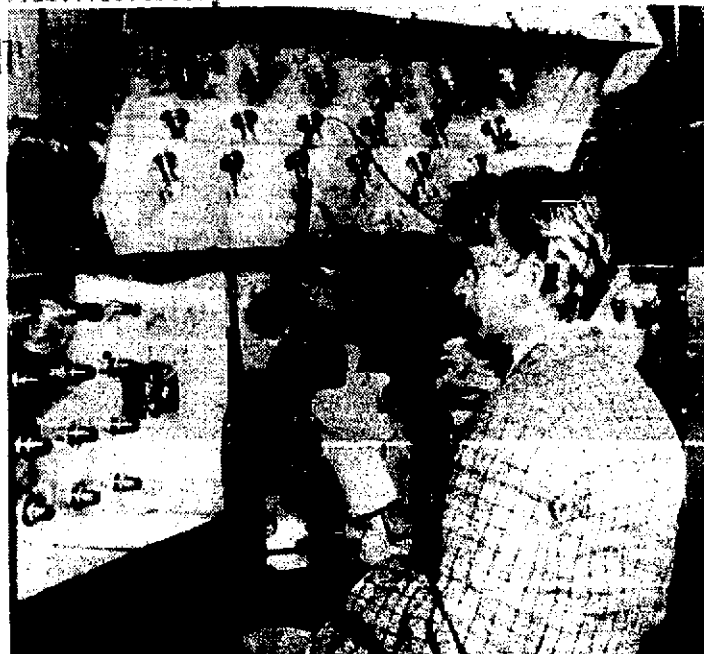

"At NBC, we're generally very conservative and we take an especially tough line on the use of language — especially the hard, crude, four-letter words. That's man talk. I wouldn't use it in mixed company and I don't think the country wants it in their homes."

Violence is another story. "The public really likes those action shows," says Traviesas, who diplomatically agrees there are too many on the air but predicts a trend toward old-fashioned variety shows coming up soon. "At NBC, we are very

Television has come long way in 50 years

By ED BLANCHE

LONDON (U) — Television had its 50th birthday recently, having come a long way from an outlandish contraption made of knitting needles, tin cans and cardboard held together by sealing wax and glue.

A half-century ago, John Logie Baird, a shock-haired Scotsman, astounded 40 eminent scientists on a wintry London night with the first public demonstration of his "televisor."

They watched fascinated as "a faint and often blurred" image of the head of a ventriloquist's dummy called "Bill" fluttered on a crude screen in the inventor's laboratory in the sleazy Soho district.

The picture of the dummy's head impaled on a stick was transmitted from one room to another in Baird's second-floor laboratory on a weird machine made largely of ordinary household items and a spinning disc.

AT ABOUT the same time in the United States, an Ohio-born inventor named Charles Francis Jenkins was also beginning the transmission of crude black and white silhouettes. Jenkins continued his work with a number of broadcasting companies until his death in 1934, but history books give Baird most of the credit for the invention of television.

British journalist Bill Fox, 86, who was closely associated with Baird and witnessed the first demonstration, recalled the transmission caused a vibrating hum that "went right through my head."

The first person to appear on television was an 18-year-old office boy, William Tayton. Baird persuaded him to sit before the crude mechanical camera soon after the first public demonstration.

FOX, WHO witnessed that event, said: "I saw a face, but the picture was very crude. The boy had a cigarette in his mouth, but I could see it on a small frame about two inches by three."

Fox later participated in Baird's experiments and became the first face to be transmitted across the Atlantic to New York in 1928.

"I sat on a chair beneath 1,000-watt lamps. It was very hot. I sat rigid. Then I heard Baird shout: 'Move, speak, say anything'," he said.

"At that moment my concerned with gratuitous violence."

THE NETWORK'S concern doesn't keep violence off the air, it just cleans it up. At NBC, for instance, you won't ever actually see the knife sliding into the man's gut. You can kick a man when he's down, but not 30 or 40 times. No one can be killed twice: that is, shot first, and then thrown out of a plane, for instance.

Personally, Traviesas thinks that sanitized violence is, in itself, a problem because it doesn't show the horror of the act, or the consequences.

But still he believes — perhaps using the same gut intuition that tells him 20th Century America isn't ready for a single "hell" or "damn" in the TV version of "Rachel, Rachel" — that death and killing are much more palatable to the people (and, we assume, his own NBC bosses) than realistic sex.

"PERSONALLY, I think the more honest sex, the healthier. But you have to recognize what the human body is all about. It should be treated with dignity. Sex is a God-given thing, and it should be treated as something beautiful and not for erotic pleasure."

Not even on daytime TV, where everything is talked about but nothing actually shown; and not even on Johnny Carson, who gets away with murder; and not even on the most exciting, innovative, and patently outrageous show to hit the airwaves, NBC's "Saturday Night."

"DON'T THINK that show doesn't worry me," says Traviesas, who sprouts at least seven new gray hairs every time Chevy Chase makes some wonderful remark just bordering on the lewd and tasteless. On one hand, he's proud of the show, just as he's proud of his association with another innovative groundbreaker, "Laugh-In," but on the other hand he's extremely reluctant to push too hard, too fast.

ABC going after star personalities

By LEE MARGULIES
Associated Press

William S. Paley built CBS into the No. 1 television network on the theory that stars were the most important ingredient of successful programming. And CBS still advertises itself as the place to "catch the brightest star."

Now ABC-TV has launched a major campaign to make that formula work for it.

"Television is a personality medium," says Michael D. Eisner, vice president for program planning and development at ABC. He says that philosophy is being applied to the development of all new projects.

"Meaning," Eisner explained, "that the concept of a series is important, yes; the writing is important, the directing — but because television as a medium is a guest in your home, the people in it become the most important element, whether it's a daytime serial or a nighttime drama."

"IN OTHER words, it's more important for us to have Robert Blake in a series than it is to have a series about a cop who wears disguises and works with the low life of his city ('Baretta')."

So ABC, hoping to become what Eisner terms the "personality network," is aggressively seeking out established stars to sign contracts agreeing to make a series pilot for the network.

That way, instead of waiting for someone to come to them with an idea for a series and then looking around on short notice for an actor who fits the leading role, ABC can go to an independent producer and commission on a series proposal tailored to the personality of the individual star.

"There's a starting point in our minds," Eisner said, "which is a talent point, not 'I see a dusty pickup, let's find someone to sit in it.' Our emphasis at ABC is on personalities."

AMONG THE stars presently committed to ABC for current or future pilot projects are Nancy Walker (of "Rhoda" and "McMillan and Wife"), Tony Randall (of "The Odd Couple"), James Arness (of "Gunsmoke"), ROBERT BLAKE, star of the ABC detective series "Baretta," sometimes is upstaged by Fred the Cockatoo, his house pet in the series.

Jimmie Walker (of "Good Times"), Andy Griffith, Eva Marie Saint, Gregory Sierra (of "Barney Miller"), Rita Moreno and Harold Gould.

There's another aspect of the ABC talent hunt which stems from the knowledge that television can turn unknowns like Jimmie Walker and Henry Winkler (of "Happy Days") into stars overnight.

Pam Dixon, the network's 28-year-old vice president of talent for comedy and drama programs, is working with a $500,000 budget to find and sign performers who either are new to show business or are experienced but have little exposure on television, as was once the case with such TV stars as Carroll O'Connor, Valerie Harper and Redd Foxx.

MISS DIXON puts these newcomers on retainer for up to one year, forming a talent pool that ABC can tap for leading and supporting roles whenever a new series is being developed.

One performer who has benefited from this program already, says Eisner, is Penny Marshall. She's now the star of ABC's "Laverne and Shirley."

BONNIE FRANKLIN stars as Ann Romano in the comedy series "One Day at a Time," on Ch. 2 at 9:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Brenner short on rest

By BILL MACKAY
Ridder News Service

WICHITA, Kan. — Some days, being a big-time entertainer isn't all that easy.

Comedian David Brenner arrived in Wichita on a recent afternoon for an 8 p.m. concert. The lanky 30-year-old funnyman immediately fell into bed at his hotel suite.

Five hours later, he was in his working clothes — a nondescript off-white crew neck sweater, jeans and boots — and shooting off sparks.

He's long on talent, short on sleep. "I've been on tour for a few months, playing concerts and one-nighters," he said. "Seems I'm always catching a 7 a.m. plane. I usually get back to the hotel after a show about 1:30 a.m. I can't get to sleep until 3 o'clock or 3:30."

THAT'S ONLY part of it. An ailing architect or bank president can stay home. The entertainer has to go on. Brenner once did a show while suffering a 104-degree temperature, then collapsed offstage.

DAVID BRENNER

He worked three months with a pinched nerve at the base of his spine. The teetotaler didn't take a drink to ease the pain. "It dulls the brain," he explained. "Your mind has to be crystal clear."

The South Philadelphia native blazed onto the national scene in January 1971. He credits Johnny Carson with giving him his break. Last month, he made his 41st appearance on "The Tonight Show."

HE CREATES his own material from what he sees and hears. He never writes it down.

"Every line I do originally was an ad lib," he said. "I saw a sign yesterday. I hope it's funny. It said, 'Quality furniture since 1920.' What did he have? Lousy furniture before that?"

A post office sign warns that no dogs are permitted except seeing eye dogs. During one "Tonight Show" spot, he asked, "Who's gonna see it?"

The joke had been OK'd by a blind man.

"IF IT'S a religious joke, I check with priests," Brenner said. "If one person doesn't like it, I take it out. I've told the seeing eye joke to blind groups. They laugh."

His brash humor has made him a Las Vegas headliner at the Sahara and Caesars Palace.

Is he married? "Hell,

no. It isn't the life for a woman. Besides, I like being a bachelor. Only thing dumber than being married in New York is to be a farmer there."

HE DATES models, he said, because he likes their looks.

"The only thing that's changed is it's easier to meet girls," he said. "I've never been shy. Always had a big mouth. But before, I really had to talk fast."

It was virtually preordained that he take his fling at show business. "My father, Lou Brenner, was a vaudeville comedian," he said. "He's the funniest man. And the best."

CRITICS' CORNER

By DICK SHIPPY
Knight Newspapers

Television's family hour formula of something-old-something-new-something-borrowed-and-nothing-blue

now has resulted in "Laverne and Shirley," an ABC situation comedy which — heaven help us —

probably will become a ratings hit.

I'm guessing it will command a loyal following because ... well, because it's completely childish (or should we say thoroughly juvenile?), and you don't have to look any farther than "Happy Days," which precedes
"Laverne and Shirley" on the network's Tuesday schedule, to know that childishness is a hot commodity.

Indeed, "Laverne and Shirley" is a spinoff from
"Happy Days," and just to be sure you'd make the connection, Arthur Fon-zarelli (or the Fonz, or Henry Winkler, if you will)
was spread around like an ointment on the first episode, which was No. 1 in the national Nielsen ratings for the week ending
Feb. 1.

Of course, "Happy Days" itself is a sort of spinoff, being a de-sensitized version of the popular film "American Graffiti." That's the way it works on television — inbreeding produces the dim-witted.

BUT SHOWS like
"Happy Days" and "Laverne and Shirley" are not structured to supply wit.
They are cartoons in which the inane horseplay
of frivolous characters (who are not really characters but stick figures) is supposed to entertain us because it recalls another time when things were not SO unhappily complex, when life WAS
as giddy as a situation
comedy. In other words, here is nostalgia for numb skulls.

All right, let's be nostalgic about those working class stiffies of the dear, departed fifties (about 1959, one judges). None of this middle class jive for Laverne de Fazio and Shirley Feeney. They may not be very ethnic, but they're certainly lower class. Just one step up the evolutionary scale from the baboon.

Ten years ago they were scrawling endearments in each other's high school yearbooks ("Pepsi-Cola hits the spot" being a sample of their eloquence), but now Laverne and Shirley are working in the bottling room of a Milwaukee brewery, the home of Shotz beer (the owner of the brewery is "the big Shotz," naturally).

LAVERNE and Shirley share a dingy basement apartment. They also share leisure-time activities like visits to pizza parlors or corner saloons
where they are accosted
by cheerful, blue-jeaned
and T-shirted louts who

liams star in "Laverne and Shirley" as working girls employed in a Milwaukee brewery. The new comedy series, which led the national Nielsen ratings with its premiere, airs on Ch. 7 at 8:30 p.m.
Tuesdays.

say, "There's a great makeout movie playing at the drive-in ... It's 'The Robe.'"

Understand, this, alone, does not establish the lower class attitudes of Misses De Fazio and Fee-neey. Anybody can fall into bad habits and bad company; in fact, upper class morality permits
such back-sliding.

But television is particularly thorough in defining its class distinctions. If the big Shotz' nephew, who is working at the brewery to learn the ways of business and of the peasant folk,
should invite Laverne and Shirley to a dinner party, then Laverne will finger
the engraved invitation

with a mixture of awe and astonishment, and will tell her friend, "Hey, feel this invitation — it's got BUMPS!"

AND IF the Shotz manor house should contain a bust of the family
matriarch, Laverne will examine this marvel and exclaim, "Gee, I never saw an INSIDE statue!"

And, of course, the Shotzes' uppity dinner guests will sniff the air around Laverne and Shirley and will be exquisitely despicable until garage mechanic Arthur Fonzarelli will arrive to rescue
the maidens dense and will singe the edges of the upper crust — and this is class consciousness right out of comic books. Now, do you know why it can't miss!?

BY THE WAY, this added fluff is to be introduced weekly with scenes of Laverne and Shirley skittering about Milwaukee streets, sing-songing
their determination to make it their way and finally stopping to pose on a brewery forklift.

It might also be mentioned Penny Marshall
(she's Laverne) is sister to Gerry Marshall, who is executive producer of the series and who co-wrote and directed the first episode (he was involved with
"Happy Days," too), and Cindy Williams (she's Shirley) appeared in
"American Graffiti," wherein she was Ronnie Howard's girl friend, and Ronnie now is one of the stars of "Happy Days," and Henry Winkler (the Fonz) will be in more episodes of L-and-S — and what were we saying about in-breeding!

CONDUCTOR Michael Tilson Thomas (center) conducts a New York Philharmonic Young People's Concert to be presented on "The CBS Festival of Lively Arts for Young People" series, at 4 p.m. Sunday on Ch. 2.

TV HAS COME A LONG WAY

face was being transmitted across the Atlantic. A friend in New York watching the receiver recognized me. I said something, although they couldn't hear me in New York. But the dumb show was to prove that the picture was really of a living person."

AFTER THAT triumph, Baird told Fox: "I think I can do color."

His optimism was never rewarded, and his system was never used by the British Broadcasting Corp. The BBC started the first regular television program, confined to the London area, in 1936, using the electronic system. Baird's system was partly mechanical, using the spinning disc to transmit pictures.

Baird did produce color transmissions, but the company he set up foundered a few years later. Baird died in 1946, just as commercial television was getting off the ground. He left an estate of $16,800, a poor return for what became a billion-dollar industry around the world.

A theoretical system had been patented in Germany in 1884 and the cathode ray tube, the heart of a modern television set, was known as early as 1908. But Baird's "pictures by wireless" system and his development of it was the big breakthrough.

'Sandburg's Lincoln' final segment set

"The Last Days," sixth and final segment of the "Sandburg's Lincoln" series of specials starring Hal Holbrook and Sada Thompson, has been set to air April 14 over NBC-TV. The date marks the 111th Anniversary of Lincoln's assassination.

REGIS PHILBIN is field announcer for ABC's "Almost Anything Goes" Saturday night series and host of the network's "The Neighbors" daytime game show.

THE BIG DIFFERENCE IN SECOND TRUST DEED LOANS:

12.88%
RELIABLE'S ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE — 8 YRS.

17%-21%
OTHER'S TYPICAL ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE — 3 TO 5 YRS.

Not all second trust deed loans cost the same. That's why the Federal Government has given you a simple way of comparing the annual cost of any loan . . . the Annual Percentage Rate. The lower this rate, the lower your annual cost.

Most other companies ask you to pay Annual Percentage Rates from 17% to 21%. That's because they charge you 10% interest, a maximum commission and give you a short time to repay. Not us. Our interest rate is lower (9%), our commission is lower, and we give you more time — 8 years — to fully repay your loan, including principal and interest. There are no balloon payments. We offer you an Annual Percentage Rate of 12.88%. Check around. We believe it's the best rate available.

The figures look like this. For every $1,000 you borrow you pay only $14.66 a month. The total of payments is $1,407.36. You can choose a shorter term loan at a proportionately higher Annual Percentage Rate. Naturally, you can pay off your loan at any time by paying interest on the balance in accordance with state law.

You may borrow from $1,000 to $50,000 on a first or second trust deed loan — on any real estate anywhere in California. On the average, you'll have your loan in 10 days.

No gimmicks. No double-talk. We just think it's good business to give you the facts . . . and more money for your money.

Need a loan? Be a man about it.

The American woman.
A lot of things have changed.
Except her financial status.
Why is it so difficult for her to buy a house? Does she still need a co-signer to buy a car?
And how come her credit cards still have her husband's name on them?

Find out tonight.
As John Hambrick looks into the American woman's pocketbook...and many other aspects of her life today.

The BIBLE Says

GOD'S SCHEME OF REDEMPTION NO. 6

Understanding that there are two parties involved in God's Scheme of Redemption (God's grace and Man's obedient faith) we examined Acts chapter 2 last week and found that God's grace provided a plan, and man is responsible for obedience to that plan that he might be saved. (Heb. 5:9).

Acts Chapter Eight

There are two accounts of conversion in Acts chapter 8. The first is the conversion of the people of Samaria. The Scriptures teach that Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them. Now, what does it mean to preach Christ? Well, since there is no record of his sermon, we can know only by what those of Samaria believed. Acts 8:12 says, "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." We conclude from this that Philip preached things concerning the kingdom of God, the name (or authority) of Christ, and baptism — else how could these people have believed these things at Philip's preaching? Thus, we can readily see that Philip followed the instructions of Christ when Christ told his disciples to "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15-16).

Also, in Acts 8:30-39 we read where Philip was instructed by the Spirit to go preach to a man from Ethiopia. He believed Philip's teaching and when they came to a certain water the man said, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." Thus, God's grace provided the very same plan for every person in the New Testament. It worked for them, for when they had obeyed it, they went on their way rejoicing. We can go on our way rejoicing today — but not until we have obeyed the same things that these obeyed in Acts chapters 2 and 8.

WALT DISNEY'S "Old Yeller," a tale of a frontier family and a vagabond dog, comes to TV for the first time Saturday night on Ch. 4. Above, Beverly Washburn offers a new pup to an injured Tommy Kirk while he and Old Yeller recuperate from doing battle with a swarm of wild hogs.

SPECIAL

- MOVIE (4), 8:00 p.m. — "Old Yeller." Disney movie. A battle-scarred range dog is adopted by a family of Texas homesteaders in the 1860s and all manage to survive the dangers of living in the wilderness. Stars Dorothy McGuire, Fess Parker, Chuck Connors and Jeff York. The feature will be preceded by the short subject, "A Country Coyote Goes Hollywood," and followed by "Pecos Bill," an animated short.

WALTER SCOTT'S Personality Parade

Want the facts? Want to learn the truth about prominent personalities? Want informed opinion? Write Walter Scott, Parade, 733 3rd Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Your full name will be used unless otherwise requested. Volume of mail received makes personal replies impossible.

Q. Former South Vietnam President Thieu seems to have disappeared from Earth. Where has he gone to? —Carl Pritchard, Fayetteville, N.C.

A. On Sept. 20, 1975, Thieu arrived in London, stayed for a while with his niece and her husband, Dr. Michael Dang, in Worcester Park, a suburb of West London. His six-month visa expires next month. The British Foreign Office will undoubtedly extend it and may even provide Thieu with British citizenship if he applies for it.

BARBRA STREISAND

Q. Are there any women on the annual list of the 10 top box-office film stars? —Esther Davis, Miami Beach, Fla.

A. The 1975 list shows Robert Redford No. 1, Barbra Streisand, only actress on the list, No. 2, followed by Al Pacino (3), Charles Bronson (4), Paul Newman (5), Clint Eastwood (6), Burt Reynolds (7), Woody Allen (8), Steve McQueen (9), Gene Hackman (10).

Q. I keep reading in the papers that Henry Kissinger's days as Secretary of State are numbered. Is this true? Does Ford plan to dump Kissinger and replace him with Elliot Richardson? —Peter Norton, Baltimore, Md.

A. Kissinger has been around a relatively long time—since 1969. In that time he has acquired many admirers, also many enemies, especially in Congress where he is not completely trusted because of his doubletalk. President Ford insists that Kissinger enjoys "my full and complete support." But the evidence is incontrovertible that Kissinger's influence on Ford is waning. Two of Ford's closest advisers, Mel Laird of the "Reader's Digest" and Don Rumsfeld, Secretary of Defense, are strong supporters of Elliot Richardson, who is merely killing time as Secretary of Commerce. Henry will probably last through the year, with luck.

Q. George Bush, new director of the CIA—is he finished with political life? —F.L. Owens, Dallas, Tex.

A. Not by any means. Bush has said publicly that he plans to return to political life after he completes a tour of duty at CIA. How long that will last is problematic—perhaps one year, surely no more than two.

JERRY BROWN

CANDY BERGEN

Q. Was Gov. Jerry Brown of California ever deeply in love with Candy Bergen? Didn't she once live with Terry Melcher, son of Doris Day? —Helen Connolly, Roxbury, Mass.

A. Brown used to date Candy Bergen, who at one time lived with record producer Terry Melcher.

Q. Henry Winkler of the "Happy Days" TV show—did he recently die in an automobile accident? —G.F. and D.H., Chittenango, N.Y.

A. Henry Winkler is alive and well.

Q. Whatever happened to the mother of King Farouk, Egypt's last ruling monarch? I understand she had one of the most fabulous jewelry collections in the world. —Nedda Cohen, New York City.

A. Nazli Fouad, mother of the late king and a former queen of Egypt herself, lives sedately in Beverly Hills, Cal., recently sold approximately $500,000 worth of jewels in order to live.

Q. I wonder if you can tell me what basic foreign language is taught to the children in Communist East Germany? —Henry Coleman, Raleigh, N.C.

A. Children in East Germany must study a foreign language from the age of 11 to 16. It is compulsory, and the basic compulsory foreign language is Russian, which in special schools is taught to students from age 8 to 16. The second most popular foreign language is English.

Q. When Elvis Presley performs is it part of his act to have his white pants split because they're too tight on purpose? —Lela Jones, Hot Springs, Ark.

A. The seemingly accidental pants-splitting has become so frequent that it's now considered part of the Presley performance.

Q. When Gerald Ford was a Congressman he urged the appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court of such right-wingers as Haynesworth and Carswell. How come when he became President, Ford chose a moderate like John Paul Stevens? —D.L.L., Evanston, Ill.

A. Ford chose John Paul Stevens to replace Justice William Douglas on the Supreme Court because he knew full well that a Democratic Congress would never confirm a right-wing ideologue. He knew, too, that Stevens was a centrist and a jurist of unblemished reputation and superb qualifications. Stevens and Sen. Charles Percy (R., Ill.) were classmates at the University of Chicago, and Percy strongly recommended the appointment.

BARBARA JORDAN

Q. Barbara Jordan, a black Congresswoman from Texas, is an impressive speaker and a clear thinker—but is it true that she is owned by the Texas oil lobby? —A.L., Austin, Tex.

A. Congresswoman Jordan would like to be U.S. Senator from Texas one day, undoubtedly realizes she needs the support of the Texas oil magnates, which is why one will not find her voting against the oil companies.

Q. Mstislav Rostropovich, the great Russian cellist—is he returning to the Soviet Union or is he renouncing his Soviet citizenship to remain in this country? —D.L., Washington, D.C.

A. Rostropovich says that when his two-year exit visa from the Soviet Union expires next spring, he will apply for an extension. He wants to retain his Soviet citizenship. If the Soviets refuse, Rostropovich, who will be chief conductor of the Washington National Symphony in 1977-78, will probably remain in this country indefinitely.

Q. The hot film star of 1976 is supposed to be actor Robert De Niro. He stars in "The Last Tycoon," in "Taxi Driver," and, of course, he was in "The Godfather Part II." My question: Isn't De Niro married to a black actress, Diana Abbott? —Claire T., New York City.

A. De Niro is not married to black actress Diana Abbott. She is, however, his close and good friend, as is her 8-year-old daughter.

DEAN REED: MOSCOW FAVORITE

Dean Reed: America's Gift to the Communists

Ever hear of Dean Reed? He's the most famous U.S. pop star in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. He sings and plays the guitar, is backed by an East German band, lives in East Berlin with his second wife, is in constant demand for concerts and festivals.

His four concerts in Moscow have been complete sellouts. Ten million copies of his records have been sold in the Soviet Union, where crowds line up all night to buy tickets for his appearances.

Reed is 37, says he was born and reared in Denver, Colo., and attended the University of Colorado for two years.

He claims to have made a rock 'n' roll splash of sorts in Latin America, where the contrast between poverty and wealth turned him into a committed Marxist. From Latin America he made his way to Rome, acted in Italian Westerns, then began playing Eastern Europe, where he became an immediate hit.

Reed is the Elvis Presley of the Soviet bloc. The Young Communist League of Czechoslovakia has awarded him a medal. Hungary has given him several peace prizes. Melodiya, the Soviet recording monopoly, rates his four LP's as all-time best-selling pop albums.

Last year Reed starred in an East German film, "Blood Brothers," in which he played a pacifist cowboy. In the political society in which he lives he claims to be more musical than ideological. "I'm the kind of guy," he says, "who believes in live and let live."

Patronage Jobs

One of the most lucrative part-time jobs a young person can get these days is that of elevator operator in the U.S. Senate office buildings, the House office buildings, or the U.S. Capitol.

Currently 152 males and females hold down such jobs. They work five hours a day, six days a week, are paid $8100 a year.

Congressional elevator operators must be 18 years of age. Interested applicants should write their Senators or Congressmen for details. In years gone by these patronage jobs had gone frequently to the sons and daughters of wealthy campaign contributors or to former campaign workers attending colleges in the Washington, D.C., area.

Campus Suicide

Each year 10,000 college students in the U.S. attempt suicide. Some 1000 succeed.

According to a study by Dana L. Farnsworth, "Psychiatry, Education and the Young Adult," on a 10,000-student campus:

One thousand students will have sufficient emotional problems to seek medical help;

One hundred to 200 will be unable to continue their school work;

Fifteen to 25 will require hospitalization in a mental institution;

Five to 20 will attempt suicide and one to three will succeed.

Same the World-Over

A group of crime fighters from Eastern Europe met secretly several months ago at Varna, on Bulgaria's Black Sea. Their objective: to discuss a subject which has all Communist governments worried—juvenile delinquency.

Communists have long insisted that juvenile delinquency is a capitalist affliction from which Communist societies are exempt because of rigorous state control in bringing up children.

Not so. Juvenile delinquency is on the rise in all Communist countries, and the Reds are trying to determine why. In Bulgaria the latest available statistics reveal that at least 10% of crimes are committed by minors most of whom belong to street gangs.

In Czechoslovakia many of the growing number of crimes committed by youngsters in the 15-18 age group are committed under the influence of alcohol.

In Hungary at least 500 young people under the age of 25 commit suicide each year. They find life so bleak.

Communist governments try to blame it all on the rise of Western influences—long hair, rock 'n' roll music, blue jeans. They try to stamp out such influences. But they can't. Since the jamming of Western radio stations has ceased, kids in the Soviet Union, East Germany and Poland cut their own tapes from American, British, and West German broadcasts.

The Communist authorities in Bulgaria, for example, insist that half the songs played in bars, restaurants and discotheques must be of Bulgarian origin, another 25% of Soviet origin, and the remaining 25% can be by "famous names in the world of pop music."

In Hungary, where 30% of the high school kids drop out before graduation, pop music is more relaxed. In Budapest the newspapers list the weekly best sellers, and the discos are crowded night after night, and the musicians are difficult to control.

In Romania, possibly the strictest of the Soviet bloc satellites, the pop libraries in all the radio stations have been purged of "deleterious Western songs," and kids under 18 are barred from all Bucharest nightclubs.

Will any of these restrictions help reduce the juvenile delinquency rate? Probably not. So the Bulgarians have come up with a new gimmick. If children act illegally, Bulgarian parents will now be held responsible for having neglected their children's social and political education.

Tourist Attraction

Students at Eton College, where Britain's rich and royal families traditionally send their sons, want their school turned into a tourist attraction.

Like most preparatory schools, Eton badly needs money. To get some, the "Eton Chronicle," the school newspaper, suggests that the school try to attract some of the 3.5 million tourists who annually visit nearby Windsor Castle.

It suggests the construction on campus of a tourist shop to sell souvenirs, guidebooks, and rent out student guides.

Smoking.

What are you going to do about it?

Many people are against cigarettes. You've heard their arguments.

And even though we're in the business of selling cigarettes, we're not going to advance arguments in favor of smoking.

We simply want to discuss one irrefutable fact.

A lot of people are still smoking cigarettes. In all likelihood, they'll continue to smoke cigarettes and nothing anybody has said or is likely to say is going to change their minds.

Now, if you're one of these cigarette smokers, what are you going to do about it? You may continue to smoke your present brand. With all the enjoyment and pleasure you get from smoking it. Or, if 'tar' and nicotine has become a concern to you, you may consider changing to a cigarette like Vantage.

(Of course, there is no other cigarette quite like Vantage.)

Vantage has a unique filter that allows rich flavor to come through it and yet substantially cuts down on 'tar' and nicotine.

We want to be frank. Vantage is not the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you can buy. But it may well be the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you will enjoy smoking.

Vantage. It's the only cigarette that gives you so much taste with so little 'tar' and nicotine.

We suggest you try a pack.

Film star Doris Day, 51, and restaurateur Barry Comden, 41 (whom she may wed), at publisher's party launching her candid autobiography, which tells of three marital failures and belies her Goody Two-shoes screen image.

Doris Day

The Woman Behind the Image

by Lloyd Shearer

The late Oscar Levant, pianist, wit and raconteur, once said of film star Doris Day, "I knew her before she was a virgin."

No remark about Doris Day's movie image was ever more pithy, apt and accurate.

For 20 years, from 1948 to 1968, in some 39 films, Doris Day with few exceptions played, as she terms it, "The all-American virgin queen," the bouncy, cheerful, wholesome girl next-door, the Goody Two-shoes, the smiling, innocent small-town girl whose sweetness and light conquered male lechery and in the end won her marriage.

There is no correlation between Miss Day's off-screen life and her on-screen image.

As most reporters who covered Hollywood knew, Doris Day's personal life was frequently sexy, vapid, pathological, tragic, bedeviled and pitiful.

She confirms most of this in Doris Day—Her Own Story, a recent autobiography in which she tells nearly all to her collaborator, A. E. Hotchner, best known for his book, Papa Hem- ingway.

The truth about Doris Day—she dislikes that name and much prefers Clara Bixby, a name whimsically given her by some friends and which many of us call her—is that she is a courageous woman of 51 who, on the basis of her record, is one of the world's worst selectors of husbands.

Born and reared in Cincinnati, child of a broken home, she witnessed as a child of 10 her father's affair with the mother of her best friend.

At 13 she was riding in a car hit by a train, an accident which ended her promising career as a dancer.

At 16 she left high school to earn her living on the road, singing nightly with the big bands—Barney Rapp, Bob Crosby, Les Brown.

Thrown together with musicians, some talented, others wayward, she chose at 17 to marry Al Jorden, a psychopathic trumpeter who played in the Gene Krupa and Jimmy Dorsey bands. He beat her mercilessly even when she was pregnant, undoubtedly trying to provoke a miscarriage. He was violently opposed to her giving birth. But Doris did—to a boy, Terry, who many years later was marked for murder in Hollywood by the notorious Charles Manson gang. Instead of murdering Terry, who had befriended Manson, the gang brutally killed actress Sharon Tate and some of her friends who were occupying a house Terry had once lived in.

After escaping from and divorcing Jorden, who eventually killed himself, Doris promptly married another musician, a Stan Kenton saxophonist, George Weidler, brother of screen actress Virginia Weidler.

Subsequently Weidler left her, because he didn't want to become "Mr. Doris Day." From him, however, she acquired a lasting interest in Christian Science.

Quick movie stardom

Although she had no acting experience, Doris Kappelhoff—her real name—became a film star as a result of her first movie, Romance on the High Seas, in 1948.

For a while there were affairs with actor Jack Carson, her ex-husbands, dates with Ronald Reagan—"How Ron loved to talk and dance," she recalls—and others.

"But apparently I didn't know when I was well off," she admits. "Even though I was a two-times loser at marriage, all I ever really wanted to be was a housewife, a housewife who would rather clean, scrub, wax and polish than have a big career."

Thus on April 3, 1951, her 27th birthday, Doris Day married her agent Marty Melcher. He had previously been married to another singer, Patty Andrews of the Andrews Sisters. He was a shallow, conniving, transparently deceitful man of no apparent skill.

Melcher's 'legacy'

What Marty Melcher did to Doris Day is now part of filmland's lore. He never beat her. He simply used her. He managed her career and her money, and together with a lawyer, Jerome Rosenthal, so mismanaged her investments, "putting me in oil and hotels," that when Melcher died in 1968, Doris after 17 years of marriage to him found herself $500,000 in debt.

In 1974, following five years of investigation and preparation, Doris Day brought attorney Jerome Rosenthal to trial in the California Superior Court, attempting to recover some of her money. The trial lasted 100 days. At the end Judge Lester Olson awarded her total damages of $22,835,646, the largest amount ever awarded in a civil suit in California.

The above is just a skeleton of Doris Day's life. Her autobiography fleshes it out in candor and detail. It is not a pretty story. It reveals in the truest sense of that word her naiveté, her jarring lack of judgment, especially where men are concerned.

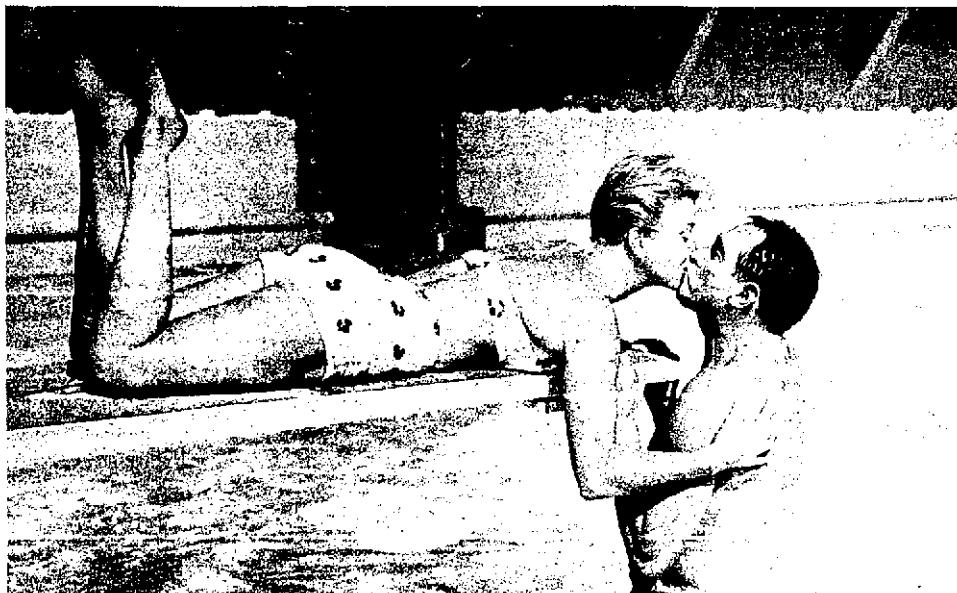

Despite her three marital failures, however, she considers herself "blessed, happy, and grateful," an indication of her limitless optimism in the face of adversity.

A few weeks ago when we discussed her past, she agreed that she had paid a high tuition in the school of experience. "But I have no regrets, she explained. 'That's the way I've grown and learned. The first man I married, Al Jordan—I was only 17—he was a Dr. Jekyll-Mr. Hyde personality. We carried on most of our courtship by mail. Who argues by mail? I was too young to listen to advice, to men like Barney Rapp and Les Brown who knew Al and warned me against him.

8-month marriage

"The second one I married, I really didn't want to get married. It only lasted about eight months. He was traveling, and I was singing at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York with Les Brown's band. George came to New York. He said he couldn't stand it without me. He started talking about marriage. I'm a very old-fashioned lady. My desire as a girl was to get married and live happily ever after, have children, take care of my husband, cook and do all those things. I've never been ambitious. I have no drive in me. I turn down one thing after another. I'm not bragging, but I'm really not happy accepting show business offers.

"George Weidler had a gentleness about him. There was a strong physical

Springboard to trouble: Doris Day with Marty Melcher, her third husband, who, along with a lawyer, managed her money. Marty died in '68, leaving her $500,000 in debt. She later sued the lawyer, won $22 million award.

attraction between us. We'd slept together many times. Many times. But more than sex is necessary for a good marriage. I know that now but I didn't know it then.

"We drove to Mount Vernon, N.Y., and a funny thing: We were married by a justice of the peace, but I can't remember the ceremony or who our witnesses were or what George and I did afterward. I do recall, however, that on the way to Mount Vernon, I looked out the car window and said to myself, 'Why are you getting married? It's another mistake, so why are you doing this?' But I did. I did."

Doris also says in retrospect that she felt some doubt about marrying Marty Melcher, her third husband. "I wasn't too sure about being in love with him. I think that maybe I loved him. But more likely he was a father-substitute. He took over completely. He turned me into a dependent child. He really seemed like my good friend. To me that was another attraction.

"Marty was very loving with my son and really good with my mother. I suddenly felt for the first time that maybe he was the one for me. I didn't know about the other side of him, his obsession with money, his deceit, his dealings. He took over so completely, he got us financially so involved that it was impossible for us to get a divorce when I wanted one. I guess I was looking for that sort of protective cover at the time. I'm not looking for that now.

"I'm very self-sufficient. After Marty died, I made all the decisions, and I really was on my own. I loved it. At first I felt like I was 12, that I was a child, lonely and unprotected, and it was really incredible for me to overcome, but I did it within that first year after he died. And I became my old self again, optimistic and self-reliant, like when I was very young.

"Marty had two sides, one side with me and another side with all of his business associates and his friends. He kept people away from me, people who might tell me the truth about him, and everyone thought that it was my doing. I didn't know what was going on. I'm really a very outgoing girl.

'Trust me, darling'

"When I finally found out about him and Jerry Rosenthal investing our money in the Palo Alto Cabana Hotel—it was really my money because Marty had no money of his own—it was then too late. Marty would say to me all the time, 'Do you trust me, darling, or don't you?' That was his theme song.

"What I really wanted to do with my money was to buy paintings and antiques and some land in the San Fernando Valley, but Marty wouldn't permit me to spend anything without an OK from Rosenthal.

"But all of that is in the past, and maybe it sounds strange, but I've learned that those sharp experiences are really beautiful. We need them to shape us up. Without them we wouldn't have the strength to handle what is coming. With each experience I gained some strength.

"I told my son Terry, after his father died, that I was going to be like those little clown dolls that are round on the bottom, because with a round bottom you can't get knocked down. Today I've got a round, round bottom. I just know that whatever is happening is going to be good."

A new love

At the moment love and the possibility of a fourth marriage loom for Doris Day, although as she insists, "I would never again marry a man without first having lived with him."

The man in question is Barry Comden, 41, a restaurant manager 10 years her junior, a tall, pleasant, handsome, prematurely gray-haired gentleman who supervises the Old World Eatery in Beverly Hills and three others in Los Angeles and Palm Springs.

The restaurants are owned by Dr. Robert Franks, who's been Doris' dentist for 20 years.

"That's how Barry and I met," Doris explains, "through Dr. Franks. I guess it was last May. My mother was in the hospital. My secretary and I would visit her, and instead of cooking at home, we'd eat in the Old World.

"One day I'd been in to see Bob Franks to have X rays taken of my teeth, which I do periodically, and he said, 'Why don't you go to my restaurant?'

Observations

"The true potential of solar power all but boggles the mind."

Jim Wright, Member, U.S. House of Representatives

So who's arguing? Congressman Wright is right. Absolutely. Enough sunlight hits the United States every day to satisfy the nation's total energy requirements for a year and a half. Nor are we about to run out. Sunshine will last several billion more years, give or take an aeon. And it's free—with no Organization of Sunbeam Exporting Countries to jack up the price.

What's the problem? Like sex appeal, if we could bottle it, we'd have it made. Although a number of solar-heated homes have been built, and solar-heat collectors are available commercially, it will take time before more than a small percentage of our total heating requirements will be met by solar energy. In fact, it will probably take until the next decade. We need better ways to convert, collect, and store solar heat at down-to-earth prices.

The large-scale conversion of sunlight to electricity is even further in the future.

Sure, progress has been made. Photovoltaic cells that convert the sun's rays into electricity have worked on more than 600 manned and unmanned space flights. Solar cells can serve down-to-earth uses, too, once man finds a way to mass-produce them and to store up electricity for nights and dark days, at a reasonable cost. About 5,000 square miles of solar cells—an area 50 by 100 miles—could equal today's total U.S. electricity production.

"SOLAR ENERGY? WHAT IN HELL IS SOLAR ENERGY?"

We're betting on it. Over the next few years, Mobil will be investing up to $30 million in Mobil Tyco Solar Energy Corporation for developing an economic method to convert sunlight directly into electricity. Mobil Tyco is now perfecting a process for "growing" single-crystal silicon ribbons for making solar cells. Its scientists can already grow ribbons as long as 80 feet, and as fast as two inches a minute. Even so, at today's level of technology, the gear to supply electricity for one home would cost more than $50,000.

But it will take time. As one expert put it: "You can't make a baby in a month by making nine women pregnant." Thus, even though there's a lot of research activity, chances are the sun won't have a sizable impact on the nation's energy supply before 1990. By then, however, the sun could be producing as much as 2% to 3% of the country's energy needs.

Says prominent science writer Isaac Asimov: "Given time, scientists can overcome the practical problems. We'll need politicians to back them and people who can understand the potential of this energy source and are willing to see their tax money spent on its development. . . . We need vision, we need courage—and we need some luck, too."

He said he owned three and he was just thrilled with the way things were going.

"He told me that he was ordering some pure, homemade ice cream for me. 'I want you to go over and pick it up as a present from me. You go there right from this office.' I don't know if I met Barry Comden that day or what, but it was right after I did that I said to my secretary, 'From now on we'll have dinner there every time we leave the hospital.'"

"Since then Barry and I have been seeing lots of each other. He's gotten to know my son very well, and they really like each other. You see, Barry was not on trial with Terry [who's 34 today] and Terry was not on trial with him. They just really like each other."

Does Doris Day plan to marry Barry?

"It's possible," she concedes. "Anything is possible. I don't know, nobody knows. I just think he's a beautiful person, and we have a marvelous relationship, really better than any relationship that I've ever had before."

"Oh, Clara!" I interrupted. "You say that every, every time."

As to why she agreed to write her autobiography, Doris Day says it was inspired by her friend, the late novelist Jacqueline Susann. "Every time we'd talk on the phone, Jackie would say to me, 'You've simply got to do a book.' Finally when Morrow, the publishing house, came up with Hotch [A.E. Hotchner] as my collaborator, I agreed—not because I needed the money but because I felt I had a story to tell that might provide readers with the courage and strength to face up to life."

"I worked on the book for about a year. I would talk into a tape recorder, and Hotch would take it from there. After we got tired of working we'd ride our bikes around Beverly Hills. Doing the book was a lovely experience, and I'm glad I did it."

Crime and Punishment 1976

by Judge Douglass B. Wright

Judge Douglass B. Wright on the bench in his Superior Court in Connecticut.

It has become popular to claim that the rise in crime has been due, in large measure, to "lenient judges" who mete out sentences of insufficient severity. Before one subscribes to this theory, it is suggested that the history of the last 15 years be reviewed.

This history exemplifies one of the first maxims a student learns in law school: "Meritorious cases make bad law."

Out of the many injustices and abuses involving minority groups there came from the United States Supreme Court certain rulings during the '60s that were desperately needed. However, out of these rulings came another problem: the criminal elements of this country were prompt to seize upon these new doctrines to subvert the law.

For instance, the landmark Miranda case set forth five limitations upon interrogation by police. Before any questioning begins, the subject must be told:

- "1. You are warned that anything you say may be used in a court of law against you;
2. You have an absolute right to remain silent;
3. You have the right to the advice of a lawyer before the questioning, and the presence of a lawyer here with you during the questioning;
4. If you cannot afford a lawyer, a lawyer will be appointed for you at the state's expense, if you so desire;
5. At any time during the course of the questioning you may refuse to continue with the questioning."

Until 1961 the state courts made their own rules on the admissibility of evidence, but in that year the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Mapp v. Ohio initiated certain Exclusionary Rules which keep from the trial jury items of evidence which were formerly admissible in state tribunals. This decision was followed by the Wade, Gilbert, Stovall, and Simmons decisions, imposing limitations upon identification of an accused party and requiring the presence of an attorney under certain situations, such as lineups.

The pre-trial hearings

Prior to trial, hearings are held to obtain "exculpatory information" which prosecutors may have in their files. Decisions on the Fourth Amendment regarding searches and seizures have led to preliminary hearings on the validity of search warrants, as well as preliminary hearings on arrest warrants. The courts are frequently faced with preliminary challenges to the "array" of jurors, resulting from decisions (which were necessary decisions) arising out of the systematic exclusion of racial groups from inclusion on jury lists in certain sections of the country.

In addition, prosecutors complain that there is no end to a criminal case, as habeas corpus petitions in the federal courts follow "final" decisions by the state courts. The effect of these rulings has been to greatly increase the time and expense of criminal litigation, both before and after the trial itself.

As a result of these sanctions and rulings during the years of the Warren court, it has become increasingly difficult, often impossible, for prosecutors to obtain convictions. At the Connecticut Bar Association's annual convention in New Haven in the late Sixties, a well-known defense lawyer from New York boasted to the assembled lawyers: "Because of the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, in every criminal case that I defend, I file 30 or 40 motions prior to trial, with the result that the prosecutor and court become so exhausted that I can get any deal I want!"

On the one hand crime has increased markedly during the recent years, while on the other hand it has become extremely difficult under the new rulings for the police and prosecution authorities to bring criminal offenders to the bar of justice. In order to clear the crowded dockets and in order to obtain some degree of retribution from the criminal offender, it has become more and more necessary to engage in plea bargaining.

Other forces and pressures have been felt during these same years. Penologists have been increasingly stressing the desirability of probation, as opposed to the historical approach of incarceration. Rehabilitation of the individual offender is certainly a laudable goal. In addition, the strain upon the taxpayer's pocketbook, arising out of estimates of approximately $8000 a year per prisoner in the correctional institutions, has been compared to the much smaller cost of placing the offender on probation.

Things to consider

When a trial judge comes to the day of sentencing, he tries to balance the following needs:

1. Rehabilitation of the offender.
2. Protection of society.
3. Detering others from the same misconduct.

Some penologists claim that the old concept of punishment should be discarded. The United States Constitution rightfully prohibits "cruel and unusual" punishments—and we all can agree that the "eye for an eye" type of retribution is now outmoded. However, should we abandon the idea of punishment altogether?

At a criminal law symposium in Connecticut during the year 1972, Dr. Robert B. Miller, superintendent of a state mental hospital, advocated that the courts should be stern with first offenders, rather than lenient. He cited the analogy that if a person wins in his first day of gambling at a racetrack, he becomes hooked on gambling. Dr. Miller stressed that discipline and punishment are still important, as human beings are not born with a conscience.

An official view

As early as 1969 the American Bar Association issued the following statement, in the face of the violence and unrest of that year:

"The American Bar Association views with profound disquiet the current tendency among groups of our citizens, and especially among many young people, to disregard the rule of law upon which a democratic society must depend for its viability and progress.

"Those who elect to defy a law because of some dictate of conscience or the intensity of their cause must be prepared to accept the normal penalties of non-compliance, subject of course to the requirements of due process."

Many lawyers, jurists, and outraged citizens have come to the conclusion that the pendulum has swung too far in the effort to protect persons charged with crime.

Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin of the Massachusetts Superior Court recently made the following observations in a Law Day address:

"I would never suggest to the courts of our land, no matter how dark the hovering clouds of crime, that there ever be the slightest deviation from the constitutional rights and guarantee long afforded to the accused, but I do suggest that our courts give him that and no more.

"I would suggest that we start trying the defendant on his guilt and innocence and stop trying the police on how they got the evidence."

Of course there can be no single solution to the problem of containing crime, as so many factors must be resolved, such as poverty, city slums, increasing population and difficult economic conditions.

For the future

However, a major step can be taken if the courts can find a way to dispose of their crowded criminal dockets and if proper penalties can be imposed for the serious crimes that are currently so rampant. The trial courts, meeting these problems on the firing line, are bound by the pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court. It is submitted that the Supreme Court should take a second look at its decisions of the Sixties. Before the trial courts can effectively dispose of the tremendous backlog and can obtain the convictions which will justify a meaningful penalty, the law of the land must swing around to giving more consideration to the plight of innocent victims of crime, as opposed to the present emphasis on the rights of offenders.

Its Importance to Your Health

by Lawrence Galton

They were patients who for years had been considered neurotic. Some couldn't taste or smell; others had grossly distorted taste and smell sensations. Yet nothing physically wrong could be found.

Today they are free of their problems as the result of simple treatment with a metal, zinc.

And that same metal treatment lately has been making other medical news—as a help for some children with poor appetites and growth rates, for babies with a life-threatening illness, for some men with prostate disorders, and for more.

Zinc is one of a class of substances present in the body in only the tiniest amounts and as little understood today as were vitamins 75 years ago. Iodine is one of these trace elements; copper, another; chromium, still another; and there are more.

PAINFUL ELIMINATION?

Many people have experienced painful elimination. And many have come to accept this as if it were natural. But there's nothing natural about it.

No matter what your age, you should have comfortable elimination.

And SERUTAN makes this possible.

SERUTAN is the effective laxative that forms a smooth gel in the lower digestive tract, where it combines with intestinal waste to give you comfortable relief.

There's no strain, and no cramps. That's because SERUTAN, with its natural ingredients, adds the necessary moisture and bulk to work with your system for smooth, easy results.

If you suffer from painful elimination, try SERUTAN. You'll be very comfortable with it.

THUMB SUCKING IS A DANGEROUS HABIT

Helps Shrink Swelling Of Hemorrhoidal Tissues Due To Inflammation. Relieves Pain & Itch...

Gives prompt temporary relief in many cases from hemorrhoidal pain and burning itch in such tissues.

There's an exclusive formulation which actually helps shrink the painful swelling of hemorrhoidal tissues caused by infection. In many cases the first applications give prompt, temporary relief from itching and pain in hemorrhoidal tissues.

The sufferer first notices relief from such painful discomfort. Then this medication helps to gently reduce swelling of hemorrhoidal tissues. Tests conducted by doctors on hundreds of patients in New York City, Washington, D.C., and at a Midwest Medical Center showed this to be true in many cases.

The medication used by doctors in these tests was Preparation H®—the same exclusive formula you can buy at any drug counter without a prescription. Preparation H also lubricates the affected area to protect the inflamed, irritated surface and so helps make regularly more comfortable.

There is no other formula like Preparation H. In ointment or suppository form.

ZINC CONTINUED

Their total weight in the body is only an ounce or less. But they are essential. Without iodine, for example, the thyroid gland couldn't produce thyroid hormones and we would become cretins—mentally retarded, physically underdeveloped. Yet the human body contains only about 30 milligrams of iodine—and a milligram is just one thousandth of a gram and a gram is about one thirtieth of an ounce.

Only recently has it become apparent that zinc is vital, that a lack of it can produce many health problems and that zinc deficiency is not uncommon.

Speeds wound-healing

Much of the first U. S. research on zinc centered on its role in wound-healing. Only about a dozen years ago, Dr. Walter J. Pories, then of the Air Force and now at the University of Rochester, made a key observation while studying wound-healing in laboratory animals and how it might be influenced by adding various compounds to their diets. One compound accelerated healing, and the effect was traced to its zinc content. Zinc definitely sped healing.

Dr. Pories and his co-workers then studied otherwise-healthy young airmen recovering from surgery. All received the same treatment, but half also received zinc in the form of zinc sulfate. In the zinc-treated, healing time was cut almost in half.

Another striking development came several years later with the discovery of zinc's value in taste and smell disorders. At the government's National Institutes of Health (NIH) in Bethesda, Md., Dr. R. I. Henkin and other investigators worked with 3000 patients before reporting their findings.

They named the disorders idiopathic hypogeusia with dysgeusia, hyposmia and dysosmia. Translated, that means

The effects of zinc deficiency are still only partially known the cause is unknown (idiopathic), taste acuity is diminished (hypogeusia), tastes are distorted and even revolting (dysgeusia), smell acuity is diminished (hyposmia), and odors are obnoxious (dysosmia).

In some patients, one or another problem began during or soon after an acute respiratory illness; in others, after some other illness or surgery; in still others, there was no preceding illness or unusual event.

Loses weight and his job

There could be serious repercussions. One patient, a 53-year-old pizza maker, lost ability to taste and smell after a respiratory infection and, on returning to work, the NIH doctors reported, "noted profound, almost overpoweringly obnoxious odors associated with various foods and vapors." When he tried to eat, he found that most foods "smelled and tasted like manure or decayed garbage." He could eat only lettuce, rice, a few bland cheeses, and fresh apples, was forced to quit his job, lost 15 pounds. Another patient was so revolted by food that he lost 50 pounds.

The NIH physicians found that patients often had had trouble convincing their doctors that they actually experienced such symptoms—many were sent to psychiatrists. The symptoms and loss of appetite and weight frequently caused anxiety and in some cases "severe depression with thoughts of self-destruction."

Yet it turned out that the patients had one thing in common: low blood levels of zinc. And they responded to treatment with zinc sulfate.

Meanwhile, evidence was accumulating that zinc deficiency could cause retarded growth. First, in the Middle East where many people exist on zinc-deficient diets, researchers found that many dwarflike young boys grew once they were put on a high zinc diet.

Study from Iran

At an American medical meeting, Dr. H. A. Ronagy of Pahlavi University School of Medicine, Shiraz, Iran, reported a study of 187 dwarfs among 20-year-old men eligible for conscription into the Iranian army. All had low zinc concentration in blood and hair. Given zinc, they not only grew in height but also developed sexually.

Almost at the same time, Dr. Harold H. Sandstead of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Human Nutrition Laboratory in Grand Forks, N. Dak., was treating a 20-year-old man with an intestinal disorder that interfered with zinc absorption from food. When the man received extra zinc, he quickly grew three inches taller and developed sexually.

Taste acuity returns

More recently, at the University of Colorado Medical Center in Denver, Dr. Michael Hambidge found that many children suffering from retarded growth had low levels of zinc in their hair. They also had poor appetites and, in many cases, impaired taste sensations. When they were fed small amounts of zinc, hair levels increased, normal taste acuity returned, appetites improved and, in some, significant increases in growth occurred.

Still more recently, in 1974, has come another finding in England that could save the lives of many babies. Diaper rash is usually a passing irritation. But in some infants it thickens, spreads from buttocks to legs, face, and elsewhere. Diarrhea also develops along with weight and hair loss. Such infants have a metabolic disorder known as acrodermatitis enteropathica that usually manifests itself at weaning and can be life-threatening.

Babies get well

In such babies, Dr. Edmund J. Moy-nahan of Guy's Hospital, London, discovered gross zinc deficiency, and he has put a group of them on zinc sulfate. "All," he reports, "are now completely symptom-free and are thriving on the zinc supplement alone."

Recently, too, American physicians have reported other findings. At the Brain Bio Center, Princeton, N. J., Dr. Carl C. Pfeiffer has noted that many children and teen-agers and some adults have white spots in the fingernails (and in some cases, in the toenails as well), apparently primarily a result of zinc deficiency. The spots could be looked upon as one possible warning sign. Treatment with zinc along with vitamin B6, Dr. Pfeiffer reports, clears smaller white spots and prevents further spot formation; large spots grow out with the nails, a process requiring five to six months.

At Cook County Hospital, Chicago, Dr. Irving M. Bush has related zinc deficiency to some prostate gland disorders in men.

Actually, while zinc is present in all body tissues, the prostate gland apparently has particular need for relatively large amounts and normally has one of the highest concentrations. Could low concentrations cause trouble?

Dr. Bush has reported using zinc sulfate in doses of 50 to 150 milligrams a day for up to 16 weeks, relieving urinary frequency, irritation and other symptoms of chronic abacterial prostatitis (nonbacterial inflammation of the gland) in 70 percent of more than 200 patients. And when he tried the same treatment in a group of men with benign prostatic hypertrophy, a common overgrowth of the gland which interferes with normal urinary function, almost three of every four responded with reduction in prostate size.

May find new uses

This may not include all conditions in which zinc could be important.

As of now, some 20 essential zinc-containing body enzymes have been identified. Zinc is known to be required for building body proteins, generating body energy, growth, sexual development, taste and smell. And the effects of zinc deficiency are still only partially known.

Zinc is present in most protein foods—meat, milk, fish and eggs. Whole grains also contain zinc. Although only 20 to 30 percent of total zinc in food is available for absorption and use by the body, still, a good common U. S. diet provides 10 to 15 milligrams of zinc daily, which should allow absorption of 1 to 2 milligrams, an adequate amount.

But some experts believe that zinc deficiency is far from rare in this country. Dr. Richard W. Luccke, a Michigan State University biochemist, has noted that "there is ample reason to suspect that zinc intakes of a number of individuals in this country may be marginal. Zinc shortages can be found in all people, rich or poor. Perhaps some people might benefit by taking a 'zinc pill' to supplement their diet."

Additives for bread

For years, foodstuffs such as flour and bread and cereals have been fortified with iron and several vitamins. In 1974, the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council reported a need for much broader fortification that would include more vitamins, other minerals and zinc, because evidence indicates deficiencies in many diets. For such a program, the board noted, technical studies would be needed to determine how the nutrients could be added so they are dispersed uniformly, don't separate during commercial handling, and don't adversely affect color, flavor and odor of foodstuffs.

Meanwhile, the growing number of reports about the usefulness of zinc sulfate prescribed by physicians for some very specific problems could benefit thousands.

THE RICE DIET

IT'S A HEALING DIET AS WELL AS A REDUCING DIET

The famous Rice Diet wasn't even designed for taking off fat. It was created as a healing diet. And heal it does. IT CONTAINS NO CHOLESTEROL

Medical Research has acclaimed a no-fat diet as being of paramount aid in the treatment of certain heart and kidney conditions. Scientists also advocate this program as the basis of a general reducing diet.

The health value of this diet is founded upon the fact that it contains no cholesterol — which many doctors believe dangerous to the heart, kidneys, and blood circulation.

THE DIET REVERSES MUCH DAMAGE DONE BY HEART DISORDERS

Twenty-five years ago our medical establishment was extremely skeptical of the startling discovery that the Rice Diet reverses much of the damage done by blood vessel, eye, heart, and kidney disorders. Without any medication other than a prolonged diet largely composed of unsalted rice, some enlarged hearts grew smaller, blood pressures and blood sugar dropped.

CLAIMS FOR THE RICE DIET VERIFIED BY TEAMS OF DOCTORS

Teams of doctors from leading institutions around the world investigated the diet. They thought that they would scoff at the claims, but they applauded instead. "The question now," concluded a report in one eminent medical journal, "is not 'Does the diet work?' The question is 'How does it work?'"

FAMOUS PEOPLE HAVE ENDORSED THE RESULTS OF RICE DIETING

"I truly would have died if I hadn't gone" on a program of rice dieting, says the wife of a former state governor. "I was seriously ill and weighed 230 pounds." She dropped 80 pounds in 19 weeks, and her blood sugar plummeted as well. (Since the diet is largely carbohydrate, this is one of the mysteries of it.)

A famous singer and movie actor, on the other hand, got hooked on the taste of the diet and lost 80 pounds, too. He still follows the diet every day. Before the Rice Diet, he had been on a high-protein diet for ten years or so: "I used to have to put down a pound of steak before a recording," he says. "Now, I can eat a little rice and sing like a bird."

Tens of thousands of people have benefited from "The Rice Diet," and less than one in 200 have asked for a refund. If you have any questions about it, we invite you to show it to your doctor for his o.k. Order Now!

PARADE OF PROGRESS

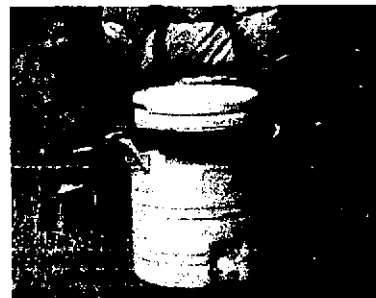

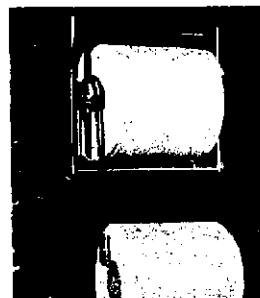

TAKE A LOOK AT THESE NEW IDEAS FOR YOUR HOME AND FAMILY ■ BY PETER DRYDEN

LADDER LEVELERS: With new accessory legs, you can modify any wood or metal ladder—step, straight, or extension type—for safe use on stairs, slopes, or ground of varying elevation. Installed quickly with simple hand tools, the legs accommodate as much as an 11-inch difference in elevation, have spring-loaded locking devices and ball socket swivel feet with rubber pads for a firm grip on sloped surfaces. Two leg assemblies, complete with all necessary hardware: $23.95 ppd. Utility Products, Dept. PP, 1212 Powell St., Oakland, Cal. 94608. (above left)

DESIGNER HANDBAG KIT: If you'd like to make for yourself or as a gift this handbag with wood frame and a delicate look of filigree, a new kit contains everything you need. It includes crewel fabric, yarn, needle, frame, handle, lining and other incidental hardware, along with fully illustrated, step-by-step instructions. Bag dimensions: 11" x 9". $7.59 ppd. LeeWards, Dept. PP, Box 903, Elgin, Ill. 60120. (above right)

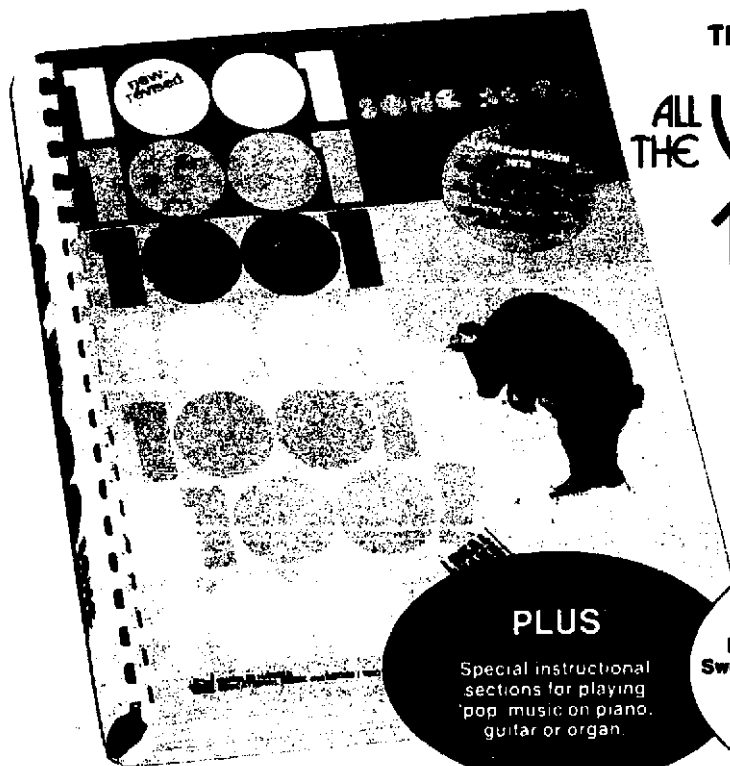

CAR BATTERY HEATER: At zero degrees F., a car battery delivers about 60% less than normal power. A new electric, wraparound heater is designed to keep your battery warm and therefore more powerful, helping to assure fast starts in cold weather. It remains unharmed by oils, acids or alkalis, claims the maker, and comes with power cord for plug-in to standard household current and clips for attachment. Suggested retail price: $4.95. Smith-Gates Corp., Dept. PP, Farmington, Conn. 06032.

ADD A ROLL: Slipped over an existing toilet tissue holder, this chrome-plated unit accommodates an extra roll of paper, ready for use. You can also use it to hold washcloth, hand towel, or other items. It measures 7 1/8" x 5 1/8". Suggested retail price: $1.19. Grayline Housewares, Dept. PP, 1616 Berkley St., Elgin, Ill. 60120. (above left)

HUNTER'S BUCKET/SEAT: Handy for hunters, this bucket and seat combination stands 19 1/2" high, the right seat height, weighs about 8 pounds empty, is easy to carry either by its two handles or adjustable web shoulder strap, and comes equipped with a matching cartridge belt that holds up to 25 shotgun shells. Inside, the insulated bucket has 5-gallon capacity for food, beverages, or additional equipment and clothes. After the hunt, it can store small, field-dressed game with ice, minimizing spoilage. It has a leak-proof, push-button spigot and is also useful after the hunting season as a beverage cooler for parties and picnics. Suggested list price: $30.75. Covey Corp., Dept. PP, Box 1317, Houston, Tex. 77001. (above right)

AND THAT'S JUST THE BEGINNING THERE ARE 951 MORE!!!

Have you ever wondered how professional musicians learn all the songs they are requested to play? How can they ever afford to buy all that sheet music? Well, most of them don't. Up until a few years ago they could buy a "fake" book of 500 songs or more. (It was illegal in those days.) Such a great book would cost them only $75 or so. A fantastic savings for $500 to $1,000's worth of music! But now, thanks to Hansen Publishing, the greatest "fake" book of all time is available (and legally too) to professionals and amateurs alike... and for only $14.95. (Your mail order price is only $12.95!) That's just over a penny per song... songs which usually sell for $1.00 or more each.

This great collection is guaranteed to thrill and delight every member of your family. Music for all ages... songs for every musical taste. From Country to Rock, Pop & Jazz... and, of course, the great standard love songs of all time. Try it at your next party... and see who can stump the piano player. With this book it is almost impossible!

LEARN TO PLAY BY CHORDS

In addition to the 1001 songs, this fantastic songbook also contains sections of Instrumental Instruction: How To Play Chords (for the beginning guitarist)... How To Learn-and-Play By Chords (for all keyboard instruments)... PLUS... a complete guide to all organ registrations.

The book is plastic-spiral bound... so it lies perfectly flat on your music stand. All songs are in alphabetical order so you can find them quickly, just like the 'pros' do.

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Here's a book we'll allow you to return for up to 30 days... because it will take at least a month for you to get through it. If after one full month you don't agree that this is the most complete, most entertaining music book you could ever own, just return it for a complete refund. No questions asked.

So why not order yours today. You've absolutely nothing to lose... and endless years of musical enjoyment to gain.

LEADERSHIP LOST

On a per capita basis the United States is no longer the world's richest industrialized nation.

The World Bank disclosed a few weeks ago that Sweden and Switzerland overtook us in 1974. The per capita income in Sweden was $6720 for the year and in Switzerland it was $6640. In the United States for every man, woman, and child income averaged out to $6200.

Kuwait and several of the United Arab Emirates boast higher per capita incomes than Sweden, Switzerland, and the U.S.A., but that's because they contain large amounts of oil and fewer people.

What's happened to the Republican party? Has it lost its last vestige of liberalism? The Gallup Poll recently presented a balanced list of 10 Republican Presidential candidates, potential and actual.

The list consisted of five conservatives: Ford, Reagan, Baker, Goldwater and Buckley--and five centrists or middle-of-the-roads: Rockefeller, Richardson, Hatfield, Percy and Connally.

Of the two groups, the second or progressive wing was almost completely wiped out. It received 14 percent of the total vote. The conservative wing received 85 percent, and 1 percent gave no choice.

Apparently the Republican party moves ever more to the right.

COMING: ELIZABETH'S 25TH

Come next year, Queen Elizabeth II of Great Britain will have occupied her throne for 25 years. To celebrate her silver jubilee in 1977 she will visit Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, and New Guinea, also all parts of the United Kingdom including Northern Ireland.

The last time Elizabeth visited Northern Ireland, in July, 1966, a young Irishman hurled a piece of concrete at the royal car, an offense which cost him four years in jail.

BIBLE BACK TO NO. 1

The Bible has recovered its position as the world's most translated work. Several years ago it lost out to the works of Marx, Engels, and Lenin.

According to a spokesman from UNESCO, "The latest figures we have are from 1972, and they show the Bible in the lead."

The most widely translated living writer in 1972 was Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the exiled Soviet author, whose works have appeared in 35 languages, the same number which honors William Shakespeare.

By 1972 there were 109 new translations of the Bible, 62 of Karl Marx, 59 of Friedrich Engels, and 57 of Vladimir Lenin. Soviet literature dominates the translation hits largely because the Soviet Union provides them at relatively little cost.

CASHING FEE

As most tourists know, Belgium is a bad country in which to cash travelers checks. Belgian banks charge a minimum fee of about $2.25 each time a traveler seeks to convert a check. That's a hefty commission to pay on a $10 travelers check. Better cash large checks in Belgium. You have to pay the minimum fee no matter what amount you convert.

IMELDA AND FERDINAND MARCOS

MARCOS AUTHORIZES GAMBLING

Ferdinand Marcos, dictator of the Philippines, has authorized the operation of a floating casino as a first step toward the legalization of gambling in his country.

Blackjack, roulette and other games of chance are now allowed aboard the Philippine Tourist, a vessel purchased in Europe and formerly known as the S.S. Breimer.

Marcos and his wife Imelda, leader of the international jet set, reportedly had Italian film star Gina Lollobrigida aboard the vessel as one of its first celebrity guests.

CORAL GABLES RISING

Coral Gables, Fla. (pop. 47,000), a suburb of Miami, is gradually transforming itself into the business center for Latin America.

American corporations, once based in Venezuela, Mexico, Brazil, and Central American countries, are transferring their Latin-American headquarters to Coral Gables.

The reason: to avoid red tape, quixotic regulations, terrorist activities and bribery.

American companies that have established offices in Coral Gables include Texaco, Exxon, Gulf Oil, Dow Chemical, Pfizer, Goodyear and about 50 others.

Coral Gables is close to Miami International Airport, the hub for planes to and from Latin America; and Miami, of course, with its thousands of Cuban emigrés is a rich supply center for bilingual employees.

CANADA'S FIRST LADY MARGARET TRUDEAU AND SHIP OWNER YUE KONG PAO. HER HATCHET CUTS A ROPE TO SMASH A CHAMPAGNE BOTTLE AT A SHIP CHRISTENING IN JAPAN.

THE LEADER

The world has long heard of such shipping magnates as Onassis, Niarchos, and Livanos of Greece, Ludwig of the U.S., Reksten of Norway, and Tikkoo of India. But who has ever heard of Yue Kong Pao?

This 58-year-old Chinese living in Hong Kong has gradually become the single largest independent ship owner in the world.

Son of a wealthy paper manufacturer in Shanghai, Pao was one of those lucky Chinese who fled before the Communists took over his city.

He journeyed to Hong Kong, obtained British citizenship, started in as a real estate agent, gradually worked his way up to merchant banker.

"Houses just stand around," he points out, "sort of boringly. That's why I decided to invest my money in movable possessions." In 1950, although he didn't know the difference between port and starboard, Pao took his savings and, with a substantial amount of credit provided by the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, bought an old 8000-ton freighter for a flat $1 million.

Today he owns 190 tankers of tremendous tonnage. He still insists, however, upon leading a spartan life. He swims for 20 minutes every day from 6 a.m. to 6:20 regardless of the weather. He puts in a 12-hour workday six days a week, is fond of quoting such ancient Chinese proverbs as: "He who gives no cause for envy lives a satisfied life without danger."

He believes publicity causes envy and is therefore chary about granting interviews or elaborating on his wealth.

DOG NEUTRALIZER

There's a new item available on the British market which causes vicious dogs to flee so that the mailman can deliver the mail and the meter-reader can read the gas and electric meters.

It's about as large as a cassette tape recorder and it emits supersonic waves which cause such pain in a dog's ears that the animal retreats immediately.

The trouble with the weapon, which sells for around $42 in London, is that it can be used by thieves to neutralize watchdogs. The gadget, in contrast to chemical sprays, does no permanent harm to a dog.

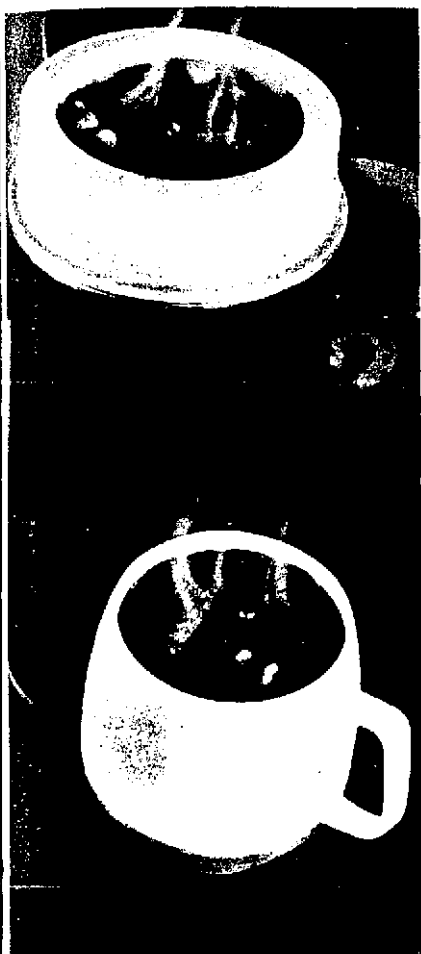

AMERICA'S FUTURE "Some people plan, others are planned upon. Some governments plan, others are planned upon."

"The American future is being stolen, dribbled and bumbled away by a government that does not plan for the long range, does not know how to plan, is afraid to talk about the need for long-range planning, and is therefore outplanned at every step by major corporations who are staking out pieces of the future for themselves, as well as by foreign nations who are doing the same on a global scale."

"Failure to look at America's current economic and political crisis in terms of the next 25-50 years is costing us unmeasurable billions of dollars in lost economic and social opportunities and is leading us toward technological and military policies that threaten the survival of the entire planet."

"The U.S., in order to avoid bloodshed over the next few decades, must begin now to develop very-long-range strategies--and must invent wholly new forms of planning that involve not merely a handful of technocratic experts, but millions of ordinary citizens. We must become an anticipatory democracy...."

"...Anticipatory democracy is the only kind of democracy possible in a period of high-speed social, technological and political change. Failure to anticipate will lead to tragedy in America. By the same token, long-range thinking that is unconnected to the ideas, energy and imagination of our whole population, long-range thinking that is merely top-down, and not equally bottom-up, could also produce the end of democracy. It is only by combining long-range strategies for tomorrow with the involvement of millions in formulating goals that we can assure ourselves that there will be an America 2000."--Alvin Toffler, author of "Future Shock," in testimony before the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution, Dec. 15, 1975.

Tar/Taste Theory Exploded.

New 9 mg. tar MERIT with 'Enriched Flavor' proves taste no longer depends on amount of tar.

Until now, cigarette flavor pretty much depended on the amount of tar that went along with it.

Regardless of "low tar, good taste" claims, regardless of fancy-filters and "space-age" filtering systems—you couldn't get high taste without high tar.

Nor low tar without low taste.

That was the theory.

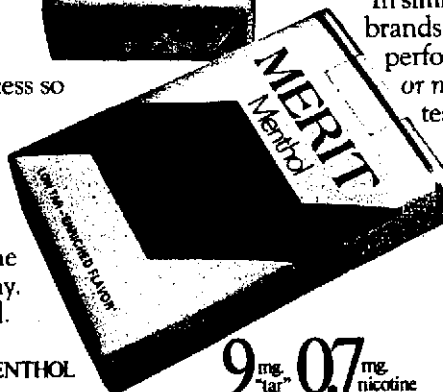

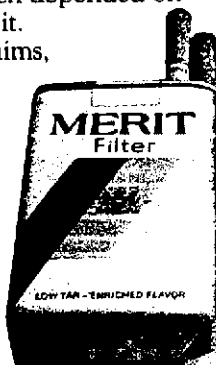

Until now.

By isolating certain "key" ingredients of tobacco in cigarette smoke, ingredients that deliver taste way out of proportion to tar, researchers at Philip Morris have developed an 'Enriched Flavor' process so successful at boosting flavor, the resulting cigarette actually delivers as much—or more—taste than brands having more tar.

Up to 60% more tar.

The cigarette is 9 mg. tar MERIT. One of the lowest tar levels in smoking today.

If you smoke—you'll be interested.

Taste-Tested By People Like You

9 mg. tar MERIT was taste-tested against five current leading low tar cigarette brands ranging from 11 mg. to 15 mg. tar.

Thousands of filter smokers were involved, smokers like yourself—all tested at home.*

Even if the cigarette tested had 60% more tar than MERIT, a significant majority of all smokers tested reported new 'Enriched Flavor' MERIT delivered more taste.

Repeat: delivered more taste.

In similar tests against 11 mg. to 15 mg. menthol brands, 9 mg. tar MERIT MENTHOL performed strongly, too, delivering as much—or more—taste than the higher tar brands tested.

You've been smoking "low tar, good taste" claims long enough. Now smoke the cigarette. MERIT. Unprecedented flavor at 9 mg. tar. From Philip Morris.

my FAVORITE jokes

by MILTON BERLE

EDITOR'S NOTE: Although he was a well-known comedian before 1948 when he starred on TV's Texaco Star Theatre, with that landmark variety show Milton Berle soon became America's entertainment phenomenon—"Mr. Television." Musing on his title, Berle can't resist recalling the Joe E. Lewis line: "Berle is responsible for more television sets being sold than anyone else. I sold mine, my father sold his..."

And then there was the name by which children across the country knew him, "Uncle Miltie." Berle first used it when he had a few extra minutes before the signoff of the show, telling children to listen to their "Uncle Miltie" and go to bed.

Berle's standup comedy, his timing and style, is often being imitated by other comedians. Some of his lines, especially to hecklers, have become classics—like the line he threw a woman heckler: "I remember you, madame. You heckled me here 10 years ago. I never forget a dress."

Berle's recent book, "Milton Berle, An Autobiography with Haskel Frankel," is now published in paperback.

Here are some of Berle's favorite lines, jokes, and stories:

I hear when Guy Lombardo passes away, in his will he says he's going to take New Year's Eve with him.

I love Goodman Ace's description of television. He says television is like a steak. It's a medium rarely well done.

New York went broke. Isn't it unbelievable? Only in America would you buy a property like Manhattan for $24 and wind up losing money on the deal.

A top entertainer, a singing star in Vegas some years ago, told Howard Hughes to get lost—and see what happened?

Some years ago Jascha Heifetz, the great violinist, was going to give a concert in Cleveland. The 3000-seat hall was sold out, but there was a terrible blizzard that night, with snow six to eight feet deep. At 8:20, just before his concert, Heifetz peeked through the curtain and saw an audience of only 60 people. So he walked out on the stage in street clothes and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, thanks for coming, but I can't give a performance tonight. You'll have all your money refunded." Whereupon a man stood up in the audience and said: "Mr. Heifetz, I drove 200 miles to be here. At least sing one song."

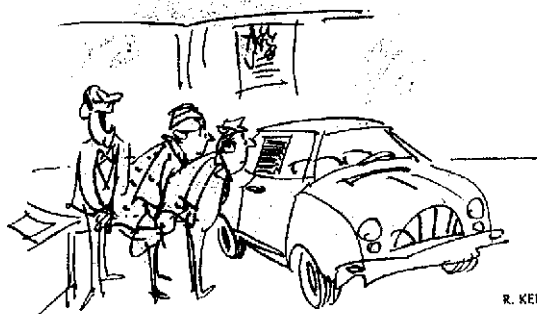

At the recent Friars dinner for my 60th anniversary in show business, I loved Johnny Carson's introduction of Howard Cosell when he said: "Here's Howard Cosell, a legend in his own mind."

I walked by an open phone booth and this guy was talking strangely into the phone. I asked: "Who are you talking to?" He said: "I'm talking to myself." I asked: "What are you saying?" He said: "I don't know, I'm hard of hearing."

Two fellas are walking down the street. It starts to rain and one says: "Open up the umbrella." The other guy opens the umbrella, and it's all tattered. So the first fella asks: "What did you bring an umbrella like that for?" And the guy with the umbrella answers: "I didn't think it would rain."

At the late Jack Benny's 80th birthday, Frank Sinatra threw a party for him in Palm Springs, and one of the guests was astronaut Alan Shepard, who flew in from Houston. Well, there were Benny, George Burns, Sinatra, myself and Shepard, who had been on the moon, talking. And Benny, who did not mean it as a joke, said: "You know this is quite a surprise. I didn't know I was going to be here tonight because last night I played a concert in Mexico City—and you have no idea how high the altitude is there!"

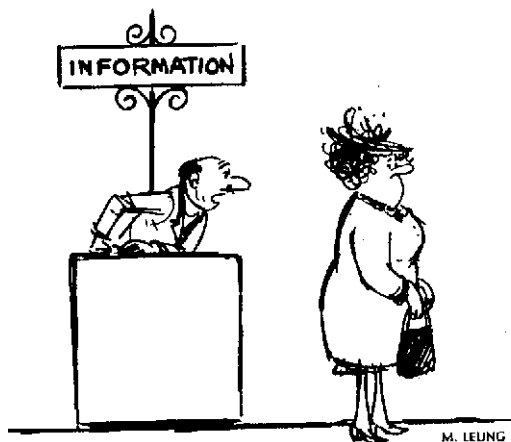

Then there's the time when the world-famous Fritz Kreisler was invited to play a violin recital for a very fashionable Palm Beach private club at a fee of $10,000. The woman, a socialite who was in charge of the event, said to him: "Mr. Kreisler, we are giving you $10,000, but I would like, I wish, that you don't mingle with the guests." And he said, "In that case, I'll gladly reduce my fee to $5000."

The politics of abortion

By JOEL N. SHURKIN
Knight News Service

Although abortion emerged as an issue in the presidential campaign last week, 81 per cent of Americans believe abortion is none of the government's business, according to a nationwide survey made by Knight-Ridder newspapers.

An overwhelming number of Catholics, whose religious organization has provided the main impetus for the "right-to-life" movement, support the idea that abortion is a private matter between a woman and her doctor, not something to be legislated.

The finding of the Knight-Ridder poll matches other public opinion surveys on abortion made in the past three years, all of which show a substantial majority of Americans support the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortions and oppose legislation curbing that decision.

The issue first began to grow several weeks ago during the Iowa pre-convention caucuses.

A newspaper column by Roland Evans and Robert Novak reported that former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter said that under certain circumstances he would support an amendment banning all abortions, legislation strongly urged by anti-abortion groups.

Carter later denied saying any such thing, leading to accusations by "right-to-life" forces that he was waffling on the issue.

Other candidates began feeling the heat, particularly Indiana Sen. Birch Bayh, the only one to completely support the Supreme Court decision. Candidates were harassed at rallies and, in several cases, were unable to complete speeches.

Last week the issue took on new importance when President Ford, trying to walk middle-ground between the two sides, issued a statement favoring a constitutional amendment giving states the right to decide the issue. He did not support an anti-abortion amendment, although he said he did not agree with the court.

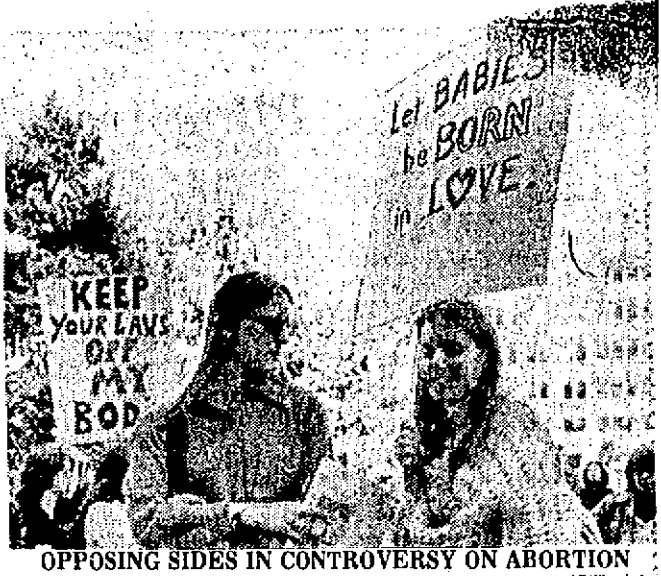

That statement appeared to satisfy no one, including Betty Ford, a supporter of abortion freedom.

Archbishop Joseph Bernardin of Cincinnati, who leads the U.S. bishop's anti-abortion movement, called the decision "inconsistent and disappointing."

Gloria Steinem, a women's rights advocate, said Ford was advocating "lawlessness" by opposing the court decision.

All of this comes in the context of consistent public opinion surveys showing the "right-to-lifers" to be a small if vocal minority.

The Knight-Ridder survey, the most recent national poll, was made three weeks ago from a sample of 1,117 scientifically selected respondents. The margins of error in such a sample vary from be-

Toll hits 7,375 in Guatemala quake

GUATEMALA CITY — Foreign disaster experts expressed fears Saturday that mass starvation and serious epidemics will envelop Guatemala in the aftermath of earthquakes that have killed at least 7,375 people by official count.

Ruined roads, broken bridges, landslides and fuel shortages blocked delivery of food into devastated areas outside Guatemala City and hundreds of aftershocks still rolled through the Central American country of 6 million persons.

Rescue workers uncovered more than 400 bodies in Chimaltenango, which is just off the Pan-American highway.

Officials claim the total number of dead is unknown in the village as it is throughout the rest of the country.

Messengers rode mules and bicycles into the capital with tales of whole communities leveled by the shaking earth, adding to the ever-mounting death toll.

The emergency relief committee said at least 7,375 persons had died since the first earthquake before dawn Wednesday. Unofficial estimates from foreign rescue workers put the toll as high as 14,000.

The U.S. Embassy said an

China's security chief named as Chou successor

By KAY TATEISHI

TOKYO (AP) — Hua Kuo-feng, the public security minister regarded by many observers as the most feared man in China, has been named acting premier to fill the post left vacant by the death of Chou En-lai.

Hua's appointment, confirmed Saturday both by the official Hsin-hua news agency and the Chinese Foreign Ministry in reply to queries by reporters in Peking, came as a complete surprise. One key official in Washington said he was stunned by the news.

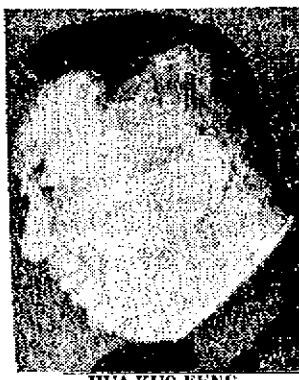

Other officials in Washington said the move reflected deep divisions within the Chinese hierarchy, but that changes in China's foreign policy and its attitude toward the United States were not immediately foreseen.

Among the first Americans to have a chance to get acquainted with Hua in his new role will be former President Nixon and his wife, Pat, who are scheduled to visit China on Feb. 21.

Many had expected that Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping, 71, who carried out most of the responsibilities of premier while Chou was ill, would become the new premier. Chou died Jan. 8.

Hua — whose age is variously reported to range from 54 to 65 — became minister of public security 13 months ago.

Observers noted that the Chinese Communist Party held its third plenary session of the 10th Central Committee in Peking early last week and that the naming of Chou's successor was expected.

—AP Wirephoto

But they said that, while Hua's appointment may have been the outcome of the session, Teng generally was favored by Chou — who helped Teng make a comeback after being denounced by Red Guards during the Cultural Revolution 10 years ago.

The appointment coincides with a blistering attack Friday in the People's Daily on "capitalist road-runners," which is viewed as criticism of the policy of pragmatism pursued by Chou and Teng.

The naming of Hua could mean that Teng is in a political dogfight with the radical Chinese left. A more extreme interpretation is that Teng has come to the end of his political rope and is once more a victim of his Cultural Revolution foes. A third possibility is that age

2 nations probing Lockheed Japanese government may be overturned Dutch prince reported to have taken payoff

By RICHARD HALLORAN
New York Times Service

TOKYO. — Japan's governing party and business establishment have been rocked by revelations in Washington that the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. has paid $12.8 million to officials and executives to sell airplanes here.

The latest disclosures Friday pointed immediate suspicion at former Premier Kakuei Tanaka, who was forced to resign in December of 1974 because of allegations of financial irregularities.

Earlier, former Premier Nobusuke Kishi, who left office in 1960, was implicated through his close association with Yoshio Kodama, a right-wing lobbyist.

BRUSSELS — Revelations to a U.S. Senate subcommittee that the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. had paid $1.1 million to a high Dutch official to aid the 1959 sale of Starfighter jet aircraft to the Dutch forces has raised a storm around Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, who has been identified by a source in Washington as the official.

The prince's name was first linked with Lockheed two months ago by a former Lockheed employee, Ernst F. Hauser, who said he learned from a third source that the prince had accepted money from the company.

Saturday the Dutch press voiced strong suspicion that the prince, who is the husband of Queen Juliana and serves as inspector general of the Dutch armed forces, was the aide who was said by the Lockheed president and vice chairman, A. C. Kottchian, to have received the money.

While the Senate subcommittee on multinationals has refused to reveal the name of the Dutch official, a source familiar with the

Secret Witness sets jewel thief reward

On the night of last Dec. 30, a bandit forced his way into the home of Long Beach antique dealer and gem collector Bernard Kaplan and took $80,000 worth of jewelry at gunpoint.

On the next night, police found a portion of the loot in a flaming trash bin behind a market at 3750 E. Anaheim St., but Kaplan estimated the recovery at less than 10 per cent.

Secret Witness will pay $500 for information leading to the arrest and armed-robbery conviction of the gunman who committed the holdup, and the victim has pledged an additional $1,000. Kaplan also has pledged another $1,000 to be paid for recovery of the loss still outstanding, or any percentage of this amount for a like percentage recovered.

If you have such information, call Secret Witness at 436-2526 between 8 a.m. and midnight on weekdays, or from 3 to 11 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. Or write to Secret Witness, P.O. Box 67, Long Beach, Calif. 90801.

Carter leads in Oklahoma voting

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter led former Oklahoma Sen. Fred R. Harris by a slim margin in Saturday's Oklahoma Democratic precinct caucuses with more than half the votes in, but uncommitted delegates led the field.

With 1,558 precincts, or about 56 per cent, of the state's approximately 2,800 precincts reporting, 32.7 per cent of the delegates were uncommitted in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Humphrey, Indiana Sen. Birch Bayh, former vice presidential nominee Sargent Shriver and Arizona Rep. Morris Udall.

Many of the state's rural areas were slow to report, and both Wallace and Bentsen supporters had predicted they would do well in those areas. Many of the precincts reporting Saturday night were in Oklahoma City and Tulsa.

Precinct officials are not required to report their vote until Tuesday and it appeared doubtful additional figures would be available immediately.

About half of the precincts tabulated were from Oklahoma and Tulsa counties. The rural vote was slow coming in, and both Wallace and Bentsen were counting on good showings in rural areas to strengthen their positions.

The caucuses are the first step toward selecting Oklahoma's 37 delegates to the national convention. Participants in the precinct meetings choose representatives to the Feb. 28 county conventions where delegate to the six congressional district conventions will be selected.

Lampoon, Plimpton shoot works

Combined News Services
Frightened residents, angry police officers and shaking buildings testified Saturday night to the Harvard Lampoon's attempt to set a world's firework record.
"It tied up all our lines, it's very poor relations for the Lampoon," said a harried Cambridge police sergeant in a telephone interview. "Twenty-seven emergency lines continuously busy!"
The loud, erratic explosions could be heard all over Cambridge and metropolitan Boston and prompted numerous calls to police and local news agencies.

The Lampoon — a leading college satire magazine — teamed up with man-about-everything George Plimpton and a pyrotechnic firm seeking to break the entry for fireworks listed in the Guinness Book of World Records.
"They had a permit, there's nothing we can do about it," the sergeant said Saturday night.
The "bomb" was tested in Long Island prior to Saturday night's attempt at the record. The challenge was the brain-storm of the Lampoon staff and former Lampooner, writer and fireworks fan Plimpton.
It was a special 10-foot-long mortar made of three-quarter-inch steel and set on a base plate of one-inch steel. It weighed 720 pounds.

"It's over," said one relieved Harvard University police officer. He said the fireworks lasted about a half hour. They were set off as part of the Lampoon's centennial celebration near Harvard Stadium on Soldier's Field Road.
It was not known if they broke the record, held by a Japanese fireworks company for its "Bouquet of Chrysanthemums," which is fired 3,000 feet into the air from a 36-inch mortar to produce a 2,000-foot diameter display.

Doorkeeper

A 22-year-old Zanesville, Ohio, college student has become the first woman to serve as a Senate doorkeeper.
Penelope Orr, a pre-law student on leave of absence from Miami University in Ohio, has been guarding a door to the third-floor visitor's gallery since January.
The gallery overlooks the Senate chamber in the Capitol. In the past, only men have been given the job. The House has yet to hire a woman doorkeeper.
The Senate sergeant-at-arms office has actually been hiring women for several years for door-watching duties. But an aide to Sen. Robert Taft Jr., R-Ohio, Miss Orr's sponsor, said none has ever been posted at doors to either the Senate chamber or galleries. They have been used for other chores, such as running messages.
Both House and Senate have had female pages for some time.
Miss Orr will be doorkeeper through April, when she will return to Ohio to continue her studies.

Death challenge

A man who escaped hanging after his 1942 murder conviction was overturned on a technicality has offered his neck for the noose as part of a campaign to get Parliament to abolish the death penalty in Canada.
Al Baldwin, 64, said in Ottawa that he would volunteer for a hanging ceremony on condition that the scaffold were erected on Parliament Hill and that two pro-death penalty legislators pulled the trap beneath him. He said the experience would prove to the MPs the senselessness of continuing the death penalty.
Baldwin, a retired government employee who was once known as Public Enemy No. 1 in Ontario province, has spent the past week around Parliament lobbying for a government bill to end the death penalty. It comes up for a vote Feb. 24.
Baldwin was sentenced to be hanged after admittedly killing a guard in a fight during an attempt to escape from a Toronto jail, where he was serving a sentence for bank robbery. He spent two years on death row before his conviction was reduced to manslaughter. He was released in 1960.

Recovering

Nancy Kissinger, wife of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, was reported in "excellent" condition Saturday in Boston after undergoing ulcer surgery that required removal of 40 per cent of her stomach.
Dr. George Nardi, chief surgeon for the operation at Massachusetts General Hospital, said Mrs. Kissinger would require one week to 10 days convalescence before being discharged.
Hospital officials had said that Mrs. Kissinger had a gastric ulcer for nine years and that the ulcer was in a healing phase and ideal for surgery. Doctors said that, when stomach ulcers continue despite medical treatment, surgery is indicated.

Editor

Izvestia, newspaper of the Soviet government, revealed in a round-about way Saturday the name of its new editor-in-chief.
He is Pyotr Alekseyev, chief editor of the daily Sovetskaya Rossiya since 1971 and a career journalist who has specialized in agriculture.
He replaces Lev Tolkunov, Izvestia's top editor since 1965. Officials confirmed last month that Tolkunov had been made director of the Soviet press agency Novosti.
Alekseyev is 62 and a candidate member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Before taking over the editorship of Sovetskaya Rossiya, organ of the Central Committee, five years ago, he was editor-in-chief of the agricultural daily Sel'skaya Zhizn.

Conscience

Sen. John O. Pastore, who is not running for reelection, has been the "conscience of the television industry," says a former president of CBS News.
Fred Friendly, the former CBS official, described Pastore, D-R.I., at a testimonial Friday night as a staunch defender of the First Amendment in TV news and the father of public broadcasting.
Friendly told a Rhode Island Press Club gathering that the 68-year-old senator cleared the way for birth of the Public Broadcasting System. Friendly also praised Pastore for opposing former President Richard Nixon's attacks on television news.

Lady Bird

A Canadian audience was treated to the accents of south Texas at a Winnipeg Symphony program commemorating the American Bicentennial.
Narrating the Declaration of Independence to Aaron Copland's "Fanfare for the Common Man" at the program Friday night was Lady Bird Johnson, widow of President Lyndon Johnson.
The program featured 20th Century American music.
"After one got used to it," one critic wrote afterward, "there was a certain charm about this gracious Texas lady's accent."

No conflict

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., denies that any conflict of interest may arise out of his wife's role in trying to arrange the sale to the Saudi Arabian government of a massive marble building on a site that had been restricted by Congress.

A spokesman for Hatfield said Saturday that, if the question comes before Congress, the Oregon Republican "won't participate in any deliberations on it, to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest."

Hatfield's wife, Antoinette, could earn up to several hundred thousand dollars by acting as real estate agent in the sale. The Washington building is valued by city tax assessors at $2.8 million, but some officials said it probably could sell for considerably more.

Pianist

Jazz pianist Vince Guaraldi, whose "Cast Your Fate to the Wind" won a gold record, has died of a sudden heart attack at the age of 47, the San Mateo County Coroner said Saturday in Menlo Park.
A native of San Francisco, Guaraldi previously played with such jazz greats as Benny Goodman, Dave Brubeck, Woody Herman and Cal Tjader. He also was known for his scoring of several "Peanuts" television specials and had just finished a new score for the next TV special.
He was found in his motel room by a member of his trio during a break in sets at a Menlo Park night club. His bass player said the pianist "had complained of feeling ill the last few days and had seen a physician."

Asylum

Egypt's President Anwar Sadat has granted political asylum to Omar el Mahishy, a former member of Libya's 11-man Revolutionary Command Council who was linked to a coup attempt last August, the official Middle East news agency reported Saturday in Cairo.

Mahishy reportedly fled to Tunisia after trying to overthrow Libyan President Moammar Khadafy.

The Middle East agency said Sadat granted asylum to Mahishy in line with "Arab tradition and in accordance with the established policy of making Egypt the safe haven for all Arabs." Sadat's decision is certain to further damage relations between the former allies, who once planned to merge Egypt and Libya into one state.

Charity

A solid silver table cigarette lighter that belonged to the late French President Charles de Gaulle was sold Saturday at an auction to benefit cancer research for $5,900 to the French jeweler Cartiers.
The lighter was donated to the charity by De Gaulle's widow. Cartiers was the only bidder.
De Gaulle, once a heavy smoker, gave up smoking completely in 1947.

Jackson apologizes to Senate for handling of Hoffa probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., has apologized to colleagues for the way a subcommittee he chairs handled a futile search last October for the body of former Teamsters President James Hoffa.
Jackson's apology was disclosed Friday by Chairman Abraham Ribicoff of the Senate Government Operations Committee and by Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., the committee's ranking minority member.
Ribicoff, D-Conn., said Jackson had apologized that the full committee had not been told about proceedings leading up to the search for Hoffa's body in a field in Oakland County, Mich.

"Sen. Jackson did apologize for what had taken place," Ribicoff told the Senate Rules Committee.
At issue is the flap that was created when staff members on Jackson's permanent investigations subcommittee — a unit of Ribicoff's committee — passed along a tip on the location of Hoffa's body to Michigan Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley.
Several other senators complained that the information — which proved to be valueless — should have been given to the FBI.
Percy told the Rules Committee he believed the situation had been "politicized," a reference to the fact that Kelley is chairman of the Jackson for President Committee in Michigan.

Jackson is seeking the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination.
"It should never have occurred," Percy told the Rules Committee.
Ribicoff and Percy said that Jackson's apology came at a recent closed meeting with Jackson and several staff members of the Government Operations Committee.
"I was deeply disturbed, and so was Sen. Percy," Ribicoff said. "Neither I nor Sen. Percy was informed of those proceedings."
Ribicoff said that Jackson had promised "that anytime this would ever happen (again) that Sen. Percy and I both would be informed."

Ribicoff and Percy had appeared before the Rules Committee to support the Government Operations Committee's upcoming budget for investigations and related work.
The Rules Committee has been holding hearings on the budgets of other Senate panels.
The Hoffa matter came up when Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., asked Ribicoff why the tip on Hoffa's body — which came from a confidential informant — had been given to Kelley instead of to the Justice Department or the FBI.

Sequestered in Holiday Inn

Hearst jurors in own 'prison'

Combined News Services
SAN FRANCISCO — The Patricia Hearst jury, after two days of watching movies filmed by bank surveillance cameras, took a day off Saturday and went to the movies.
Somebody with a wry sense of humor selected for their viewing pleasure a movie called "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," which is about people sequestered in a lunatic asylum. The jurors are sequestered so that they cannot be affected by outside influences during the trial of the Hearst heiress.

Their prison is a Holiday Inn eight blocks from the federal courthouse. Here the entire 14th floor has been secured so that they will have no contact with anything or anybody who might sway their consideration.

Every member of the seven-woman, five-man panel has a separate room that she or he cannot leave between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. They have a recreation room with TV and reading matter, but programs and publications are censored to eliminate any references to the trial. While the TV is on, a deputy marshal is present with a remote control instrument that he can use to cut a program if anything is said on screen about Patricia Hearst.

An alarm system has been installed to give warning if any unauthorized person appears on the 14th floor. Waitresses and maids at the motel have been investigated to insure they have no connection with the case.
During the weekend a bailiff will visit any female juror who wants to doll herself up. The panel also will be taken on a bus trip, probably to scenic Marin County.
Each juror is allowed two alcoholic drinks with dinner. "There was a case where jurors were allowed five drinks," said Chief Deputy Marshal John

Brophy. "It was found to be unwise."
Saturday, accompanied by a marshal, one of the jurors, a Seventh Day Adventist, went to church. The service lasted three hours. Today, those jurors who wish also will be allowed to attend church.
On Monday, the panel returns to the courtroom where the prosecution is still presenting testimony about the robbery of the Hibernia bank in April 1974 by Miss Hearst and members of the Symbionese Liberation Army. The task of the jurors is to decide whether she acted out of fear, or enthusiasm for, the SLA.

Rain to keep on falling

More rain is due in the Southland today as a five-day-old storm continues to make up for a rainless January.

National Weather Service forecasters said the storm had dumped more than two inches of rain in the area by late Saturday. They predicted occasional rain today with some local downpours.

The forecasters added, though, that the most rain would fall in the mountains, where an influx of subtropical moisture was predicted to dump three to five inches of rain by tonight.

The warmer air also should lift the snow level, which was down to about 3,500 feet Friday, back to the 7,000-to-8,000-foot level, forecasters said.

California Highway Patrol officials predicted a massive traffic jam in the San Bernardino Mountains this afternoon when weekend travelers begin the journey home.

Officials said the traffic jam, expected to be complicated by weather conditions, could delay motorists as long as five hours descending from Big Bear to San Bernardino.

Motorists planning to spend the day in the mountains were advised to take chains because of intermittent snow showers.

Forecasters said Southland temperatures would remain chilly, with highs near 58 in coastal areas.

$1,000 welder taken by thieves

Burglars who used a passkey or picked the gate lock to enter the storage yard at Rampart General, Inc., 6956 Cherry Ave., took an arc welder valued at $1,000, Long Beach police reported Saturday.

Moscow radiation hazard to staff in U.S. embassy

WASHINGTON (AP)—American Embassy staff members in Moscow have been warned they may have been exposed to dangerous levels of radiation stemming from some type of sophisticated Soviet listening or jamming equipment, sources said Saturday.

State Department spokesman Robert Funnell said he could not comment on the subject. But other sources said the embassy staff was told in a secret briefing by Ambassador Walter J. Stoessel Jr. that there may be a potential medical problem because of the Soviet equipment.

One source said shields are being installed in embassy windows to protect American personnel.

It was not clear what type of device might be producing the radiation or if the U.S. government has been able to identify the Soviet equipment.

A source said embassy officials became concerned about detection of high radiation levels in December and tried to pin down the source.

The source said the investigation was complicated by the fact that the embassy was surrounded by Soviet buildings, any of which might have been the source of the radiation.

The investigation showed that the radiation was the result of Soviet electronic devices, "but how they're doing it and why they're doing it is still up in the air," the source said.

He said that although this was first time high levels of radiation had been a problem at the Moscow embassy, use of powerful electronic equipment is "part of the game every side plays."

Embassy personnel reportedly were asked not to discuss Stoessel's briefing. The American Embassy in Moscow is housed in a sprawling 10-story building. It contains about 50 apartments and four floors of offices for 125 embassy staff members.

Both the United States and the Soviet Union plan to build new embassy complexes in Moscow and Washington simultaneously, but construction work has not started yet.

The original report of the bugging came from the Los Angeles Times.

The Times said more than 100 embassy staff members were reported to have been briefed in secret sessions Friday, and they were urged to keep the matter secret. The State Department was said to be anxious to prevent publicity about the subject for fear of harming Soviet-American relations.

State to check schools for chemical hazards

SACRAMENTO (AP)—Science laboratories of California colleges and high schools will be checked for cancer-causing chemicals, the state Department of Industrial Relations said Sunday.

Donald Vial, state director of industrial relations, said he is convening a meeting Monday in San Francisco of public and private school administrators in response to a "hazard alert" issued by the federal government.

Vial said the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) found the potential cancer-causing chemicals were being used "without precaution" in schools in eastern states.

He said 14 chemicals were on the list. OSHA recommended removing them from schools or marking them as hazardous and setting up special storage procedures if they remain in schools.

A spokesman for Vial said he had no first-hand knowledge of any of the chemicals being used today in California schools. He said the meeting Monday will take up that issue and come up with procedures for reporting chemicals and correcting possible incidents of hazardous exposure.

"General patterns of usage make it likely that exposure, if any, may be occurring in college laboratories, and possibly to a lesser extent in high schools," Vial said in a prepared statement.

Vial said representatives of University of California, the state university and college system and public schools will attend the meeting.

Doctor held in probe of ex-wife's murder

WEST COVINA (AP)—A doctor has been booked for investigation of murder in the death of his former wife, authorities say.

Police said Dr. Richard Charles Ey, 42, was arrested in La Jolla Friday for the death of Marilyn Heller Ey, 41, whose body was found in his apartment. Police said Mrs. Ey, who lived in Tustin, had been dead eight to 10 days. An autopsy was scheduled. Investigators said her body was discovered by a policeman who had gone to Ey's apartment to arrest him for failing to appear in a court case. He had been scheduled for arraignment on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon after he allegedly beat his former wife, with a towel rack.

Police said Mrs. Ey had posted the $1,000 bail to free her former husband from jail on that charge.

Man linked to 3,000 thefts

A Hollywood-area bartender, arrested last week on car-theft warrants, apparently was responsible for more than 3,000 auto burglaries last year, authorities said Saturday.

Police said Stephen Burdick, 25, told them he broke into about 5,000 cars last year and stole items that were later sold for cash to purchase about $80,000 worth of cocaine.

Investigators, however, said they thought Burdick's figure was too high, adding they suspected him of about 3,000 auto burglaries. They estimated that he took about $250,000 worth of merchandise from the cars.

Ford in N.H., says economy 'up'

By DON McLEOD

NASHUA, N.H. (AP) — President Ford flew to the aid of his New Hampshire campaign Saturday, encouraging supporters and claiming his disciplined approach is saving the economy.

Ford hit New Hampshire, where his second-term bid admittedly faces one of its stiffest tests in the Feb. 24 primary, on a high note of economic improvement.

Tramping coatless through the snow, shaking hands along reception lines and fielding questions in a budget briefing, Ford worked for an image of calm responsibility while his aides described challenger Ronald Reagan as too controversial for New England taste.

The economic discipline we have maintained is justified by this week-end's statistics," Ford told the Nashua Chamber of Commerce.

"It was also a year of new realism that taught us something important about America," Ford said. "It restored common sense and discipline."

Earlier, a campaign official acknowledged for the first time a planned strategy of chipping away at Reagan through criticism of his record and campaign proposals and claimed it was working.

Peter Kaye, spokesman for the Ford campaign, said Reagan is on the defensive and being viewed "as something of a political opportunist, a vacillator, a backer of controversial if not outright screwy schemes."

Ford, meantime, was calling for patience and warned against "false promises and false promises," presumably from both the Democratic

"It took many years of excessive spending, combined with a four-fold increase in international oil prices, to create the economic difficulties of 1974 and 1975," Ford said.

"It will take several years of sound policies and reasoned restraint to restore sustained, non-inflationary growth," he said.

The rest of the day, Ford was busy with traditional campaign activity, braving the near-zero weather to shake hands with well-wishers along the snowbanked roads, speaking to local officials and campaign supporters and dropping in on a nursing home.

At the Greenbriar Health Care Center, Ford made an unscheduled stop

Media too demanding, says Carter

By DICK PETTYS

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter says he wants "to be examined closely" in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination. But he says he has trouble answering some questions about his personal beliefs, including his views on abortion, and he thinks the news media demand too many specifics from candidates.

Carter, 51, who made a strong showing in early Democratic presidential caucuses in Iowa, Maine and Mississippi, said much criticism directed against him was unjustified — including assertions that he was vague on some proposals and that he misled voters on his stands on abortion and right-to-work laws.

But, he said, "I want to be examined closely. If I can't stand the examination, then I don't deserve to be president."

He said he believed the 1976 presidential election would revolve around voter confidence not around whether a candidate is identified with exclusively liberal or conservative causes.

Critics have accused Carter of clouding his abortion views to win votes from the antiabortion faction in Iowa and changing his position on right-to-work laws to win labor support.

"I never have taken but one position on the issue of abortion. My statements don't completely please the right-to-life people," Carter said. "My statements don't completely please the abortionists. But my position has never changed. I think abortion's wrong. I don't think government ought to do anything to end abortions."

He said he believed the need for abortions should be minimized through education, family planning and "better adoption procedures." He said his position has been "to some degree" influenced by a feeling that the U.S. Constitution should not be "amended frequently unless there's some abridgment of rights."

Reagan plan for SS: Invest fund in stocks

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan Saturday suggested investing Social Security money in the stock market as a possible solution to a deficit he says is growing in the Social Security system.

Reagan also conceded that the liberalized abortion bill he signed as governor of California led to an "abortion on demand" practice in many of that state's hospitals. He added that he would not make the same "mistake" today.

Reagan said that he had not yet come up with a firm plan for where the money would come from to make the changes in Social Security he says are needed.

He said, however, that one alternative could be "investing Social Security trust funds in industry."

"I know of no pension fund outside Social Security where people are totally dependent on the money they contribute," Reagan told a news conference before speaking at a Florida Jaycees convention.

At a luncheon before about 1,500 Jaycees, Reagan gave his standard speech railing his government and outlining his record as California governor.

The Jaycees interrupted him with applause more than 15 times as he blasted welfare spending, the federal bureaucracy, détente, the United Nations, and abortion.

The Californian has taken a strong position against liberalized abortion law in his campaign for the Republican nomination for president, and said he would support a constitutional amendment overruling the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling liberalizing the basis for abortion.

His decision, repeated in nearly every stop in New Hampshire, where "Right to Life" groups have made abortion a major campaign issue, is that he opposes abortion in all circumstances except when a mother's life is imperiled by her pregnancy.

Udall says Nixon trip to China unwise

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — As President Ford arrived here Saturday, U.S. Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., criticized former President Nixon's planned China trip, terming the proposed visit "a serious mistake."

Udall, on the presidential trail in New Hampshire's largest city, urged Ford to ask Nixon to suspend the trip.

"I would hope in a delicate way the President and (Secretary of State Henry) Kissinger would urge him (Nixon) not to go. Of course, Mr. Nixon is a private citizen and, if the Chinese ask him, there is nothing we can do."

"But all this visit can do is remind the world and the American people of the entire Watergate disgrace. Nixon has poor judgment about this. In his own mind he does not see himself as a disgraced president, but part of history and this trip is to bolster his psychological."

Simon assails government size, spending

Ford readies major arms sale to Egypt

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Ford administration, seeking to strengthen Washington's ties with Cairo, was reported Saturday close to a major decision to consult with congressional leaders on ending a long-standing ban on the sale of military equipment to Egypt.

High administration officials have said in interviews that a final determination had not yet been made on the controversial question.

But they said that various recommendations on how to proceed toward lifting the embargo were at the White House — the result of weeks of interagency discussions in which the State Department took the lead.

Because of the extreme political sensitivity of the issue in this election year, the administration has been moving cautiously.

Officials said they were aware that any decision to sell military equipment to Egypt would cause concern in Israel and among Israeli supporters in Congress and elsewhere. Thus, the officials said, the administration was determined to take no action without first consulting congressional leaders and committees.

President Anwar Sadat, who has broken Egypt's once close ties with the Soviet Union, has urged the United States for the past two years to lift the embargo and allow him to purchase a wide range of military equipment to help Egypt compensate for the loss of Soviet arms.

President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger have privately and publicly shown their sympathy toward Sadat's problems. Ford, in fact, said in an interview last September that he believed the United States had "an implied commitment" to sell Egypt certain equipment.

When Sadat was here in October he discussed military sales with intensity on the matter, but no decisions were made. Officials have been working intensely since then and categories of military equipment sought by Egypt have been under study.

The requests from Sadat are wide-ranging. They include C-130 military transport planes, Hawk antiaircraft missiles, tow antitank weapons, radar and communications equipment, naval patrol boats and F-5E jet fighter planes.

At the moment, Sadat has asked for early action on his request for sale of six C-130's, which would cost Egypt a total of about $30 to $40 million, a high-ranking State Government official said.

"It has become a prestige item for Egypt," the official said.

A presidential determination would be needed to allow the sale, but the administration has also told Congress that nothing would be done without prior consultation.

More energy homes eyed

By MARC WILSON

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Federal officials say a pilot "energy home" building program in Arkansas may be expanded to other states if it continues to produce a 60 per cent to 65 per cent savings in residential energy consumption.

Arkansas Power and Light Co. says data from the fewer than 200 homes built under the pilot program thus far have shown the high percentage of energy savings. And it says utility bills for residents of the energy homes are about half the amount of bills received by residents of conventionally built houses.

The pilot program homes use twice as much insulation as in conventional homes, have substantially reduced window space and restricted areas for the use of heat-producing appliances.

The program was established in 1973. The federal Department of Housing and Urban Development granted a local exception in building standards to permit construction of the energy homes with federally insured loans.

A report on the project was filed with HUD last year, and the department is considering distributing information about it nationwide, according to Roger Zachritz, deputy area director of the Little Rock HUD office.

Raymond Eveland, program marketing coordinator for the Department of Commerce office in Dallas, said he may organize a 10-state program to promote the energy home as a major energy conservation tool.

According to Commerce

Department figures, 1.5 million homes will be built in the United States this year. The department estimates that 19 per cent of the nation's energy is consumed by residential use.

"You can see what a potential for energy savings we have in this project," Eveland said. "I think we may be at the stage to try this on a larger scale."

William Young, chief of the loan-guarantee section of the Veteran's Administration regional office, said the VA has approved loans for 135 energy homes.

"As a government agency we promote anything that saves energy," Young said. "Also, the price of housing has gone up recently so much that many veterans can't qualify for loans anymore. But when we know their utility bills are going to be cut in half, we're more likely to approve a loan in a marginal case."

Residents of the new-style homes say they're generally happy with their houses, although almost all say they don't like the 8 per cent limit on window space.

"We're quite satisfied," said Bob Finch, who moved into an energy home in Jacksonville last summer. "So far no problems, except maybe the windows are smaller than we'd like."

Connie Jacobus, a real estate agent and housing contractor, said she was "very skeptical at first. I thought it was a gimmick, something some pirate had come up with. But the homes are really better for the builder, better for the buyer and better for the general public."

12 die as train, camper collide

BECKEMEYER, Ill. (AP) — Twelve young people out for an evening of roller skating were killed Saturday night when their camper truck was struck by a freight train at an unguarded crossing.

An ambulance driver said bodies were strewn along two-fifths of a mile of track in the heart of this community east of St. Louis.

State police said 16 persons were packed into the recreational vehicle. They were thought to be members of two families.

The dead were all 18 or under, except for the driver, Henry Lowe of rural Carlyle, grandfather of several of the victims.

The four injured were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital in nearby Breese, with three of them listed in serious condition.

"It was an unprotected crossing," said State Police Sgt. William Pleyce.

"No lights, no gates, no nothing."

The Baltimore & Ohio freight train was west-bound toward St. Louis when it struck the truck on the driver's side.

Despite bitterly cold temperatures, there was no evidence of ice or snow at the crossing, which rises about four feet to the tracks. The night was clear, with a bright half-moon.

Police Chief Robert Phillips said the camper was either going to or coming from a roller rink, probably the one in nearby Highland. Orvin Leonard of Beckemeyer, one of the wrecking crew, said there were at least 10 pairs of roller skates inside the camper.

Phillips reported that engineer O.J. Cores of rural Washington, Ind., said the train was traveling at about 55 miles an hour.

Memo questions CIA's authority for covert actions

By JOHN CREWDSON
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON—The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence has obtained a copy of a memorandum, drawn up last year for the CIA director, that one committee source described as raising "serious questions" about the constitutionality of covert military and political operations undertaken by the United States between 1947 and the passage of the Foreign Assistance Act in 1974.

The memorandum, a copy of which was obtained by the New York Times, was produced last September by a group of legal researchers under contract to the intelligence community staff, an umbrella group that works for the CIA director in his capacity as coordinator of the federal intelligence agencies.

The Senate source said it appeared to lawyers

ly been shared by Congress, whose approval is required for treaties, declarations of war and funds for their conduct, and the president, who under the Constitution negotiates treaties and serves as commander-in-chief of the nation's military forces.

The collection of foreign intelligence necessary to the formulation of foreign policy, it said, is an executive function that can be carried out by the President, through the CIA and other executive agencies, without supporting legislation.

Nor, it continued, is there any doubt about the President's authority to use covert or other means, in his capacity as the supreme military commander, "to meet the threats of war or national emergency."

But the memorandum declares that until the passage of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1974, "there was serious doubt that the CIA had authority to engage in covert operations involving the use of political and military force against, or in support of, a foreign government or its leaders."

Such actions, the researchers wrote, amounted to the implementation of foreign policy, a shared function that had not been wholly delegated to the President, or through him to the CIA, by Congress in the National Security Act.

The Foreign Assistance Act, which limits the authority of the President to use appropriated funds to finance covert political or military operations in foreign countries, requires him to first report to Congress the importance of such operations to the national security.

"Any question as to whether the President can authorize covert operations," the report stated, "has now been removed" by the passage of the Foreign Assistance Act.

But it added that, although "differences of opinion" on the question have existed among those inside the CIA and others outside it, it was "doubtful" that the agency was intended by Congress before 1974 to have the autonomous power "to implement foreign policy by the use of covert means targeted against foreign elements."

"The theory that the President has unrestricted sovereign power to authorize covert operations as long as they do not violate international law cannot be supported, the study concluded.

EXCLUSIVE

who had obtained the memorandum that it was "important in undercutting the theory" with which the CIA has justified initiating covert operations without first seeking the approval of Congress.

The CIA has argued that the President's inherent powers to control some aspects of foreign and military affairs, along with the language of the 1947 National Security Act that established the CIA, have made congressional authorization unnecessary.

One senior intelligence official asserted Saturday that the 1975 memorandum had no official status as a policy document within the CIA, since it had been approved neither by the agency's general counsel nor its special counsel.

The official added that the 48-page paper had been prepared largely by three law students among those hired for the intelligence community staff's legal research project last summer.

Nonetheless, the paper is considered a crucial document by the Senate Intelligence Committee, which is known to be preparing a study that is expected to argue against the President's inherent power to launch covert operations on his own, because of the papers' acceptance by the intelligence community staff, where one source said it had been widely read and discussed.

One government lawyer said that the acceptance of the memorandum by the intelligence community staff did not amount to an internal admission by the CIA that its stated policy over the past two decades had been badly founded in law.

But the lawyer and others familiar with the legal questions involved said they believed that the memorandum's expressions of doubt about the inherent powers argument was "a more accurate reflection of the state of the law" than the CIA's formal position on the matter.

That position, presented to the House Select Committee on Intelligence last December by Mitchell Rogovin, the CIA's special counsel, concludes that in addition to the President's inherent constitutional authority to conduct foreign affairs and the wording of the National Security Act, authorization for covert operations could be found in the ratification by Congress over the past 28 years of "the authority of the agency to plan and conduct covert action."

The research paper, which notes at its outset that it was prepared at the request of the intelligence community's coordinating staff on the basis of a recommendation by the CIA's general counsel, makes a distinction between covert activities designed to gather intelligence and those aimed at influencing through political or military means the internal affairs of another country.

The paper notes that authority in the field of foreign affairs has historical-

Field question

I live about 15 blocks from the beach in East Long Beach, and I'd like to know if the oil pumped through the off-shore drilling platforms comes from under my property? I own the oil rights on my property, and I'd like to know if I'm eligible for any royalties. Maybe this is just wishful thinking on my part, but I'd really like to get an answer. Mrs. R.M., Long Beach.

All Long Beach residents who are entitled to royalties from oil island production are receiving them and have been for about 10 years, said John Parkin of the Long Beach Department of Oil Properties. The underground oil pool does extend inland about two miles in certain sections of the Westside, but your area is not included in the tideland oil project. The southeastern boundary of the underground pool is near the Belmont Pier and, in the East Long Beach area, the deposit does not extend very far inland. There are about 10,000 Long Beach lots in the productive area.

Note worthy?

In 1969 I gave a restaurant cashier in Michigan a $5 bill for my meal, and she told me I didn't want to spend the bill because it was worth at least $7.50. Upon closer scrutiny, I saw that the words United States Note were written on it instead of Federal Reserve Note and that the serial numbers were printed in red ink rather than green. I have inquired about its value at banks and have received nothing but blank looks. Can Action Line find out if such notes are more valuable than their printed face value? C.N., Westminster.

If your $5 bill is used, it's worth $5, said Dean Duffy, authority on currency at Liberty Coin Co., 1053 South St. If you want more than that for it, he suggested you "put it in a savings account and let it draw interest." An unused, crisp bill like yours is valued in collectors' manuals at $30, but Duffy said he recently sold two of them for $15 each. The selling price depends on supply and demand, he said. He said he couldn't say if your bill will be worth more as time goes on. The bill is called a Legal Tender Note and it and bills in denominations of $1, $2 and $100 were first printed in 1928. A crisp 1928 $5 bill might be worth as much as $50, Duffy said. The $5 Legal Tender Note was last printed in 1963. Only the $100 bill is still being printed.

Renter rebate

We hear constantly that the state is in need of tax money. How is it that we renters get a tax rebate on our state income tax returns? Where does the money come from? H.J., Long Beach.

The money for the renters' refundable credit, or rebate, comes from the state's general fund, according to Kenneth White, senior tax representative of the State Franchise Tax Board. The rationale behind the renters' tax rebate — from $25 to $15, depending on the individual's adjusted gross income — is that, since homeowners are given a break on their property taxes through their homeowners' exemptions, renters, who contribute to property taxes through their rent payments, should be entitled to a similar benefit.

Charge

My wife and I applied to the Broadway Department Stores for credit cards several years ago, and to our knowledge, we never used them. We destroyed and discarded them shortly after receiving them. Recently, we were refused credit elsewhere on the grounds that the Broadway had not been able to collect an $18.56 charge they say we made. We have contacted the Broadway several times but have been unable to find out what they say we bought. If we did get something there we want to pay for it, but we don't want to pay a bill if it isn't ours. Can you help us clear up this matter? A.M., Cerritos.

At Action Line's request, Broadway sent you a photo copy of the sales ticket showing merchandise your wife bought in 1973. You have now sent Broadway a check for the amount owed. A spokeswoman for Broadway told us they had tried to collect the charge before they turned it over to a credit reporting agency, but you maintain you never received a bill, and that although you moved after the charge was made other mail had been forwarded to you.

tween 2 and 3 per cent and 5 per cent, depending on how many answered each question.

The survey asked if respondents agreed or disagreed with the following statement: "If a woman wants to have an abortion that is a matter for her and her doctor to decide and the government should have nothing to do with it."

Of all those asked, 81 per cent agreed, 15 per cent disagreed and 4 per cent said they did not know.

When broken down by religion, 82 per cent of Protestants and 98 per cent of Jews agreed with the statement. Of the Catholics asked, 76 per cent agreed, 21 per cent disagreed and 3 per cent said they did not know.

Political party made little difference. Eighty-five per cent of Republicans and those who considered themselves independents agreed with the no-legislation statement, while 78 per cent of Democrats agreed. The difference could be because most Catholics are Democrats, but even then the effect is minimal.

Age made no statistical difference in the Knight-Ridder survey.

As with all public-opinion surveys, much depends on how the question is asked. In the Knight-Ridder poll, the question might have a tendency to elicit a positive response.

This, however, would not alter the fact that the difference between Protestants and Catholics is only 6 per cent, much smaller than it would be if Catholics as a whole agreed with the "right-to-life" movement or stated Church dogma.

Other polls have shown similar results. Depending on how the question is asked, Gallup, Harris and NBC News polls have shown a spread of 54 to 75 per cent of a majority supporting the court ruling.

A survey made in 1974 by DeVries Associates of 4,067 people (an unusually high number for a public-opinion survey), showed that, contrary to church dogma, U.S. Catholics favored abortion to save a woman's life, her physical or mental health. They also favored it after a rape. Twenty-nine per cent even favored abortion if the couple felt they could not afford another child.

All this raises the question of how abortion became a political issue, particularly since the President of the United States has nothing to do with court decisions or constitutional amendments.

Merrie Spaeth of Planned Parenthood in New York said she thinks the issue is largely created by the media, which keeps questioning candidates about their opinions. She said it has so far not "normalized" as an issue because everyone thinks it is controversial, ignoring evidence it really is not.

"The candidates are really 10 years behind the public," she said.

There were 900,000 legal abortions in the United States in 1974, the last year in which there are figures. There were another 200,000 illegal ones, Ms Spaeth said.

Philip Meyers, who headed the Knight-Ridder poll said the survey, indicates the issue is alive because the Catholic vote has not yet solidified around any one candidate. When it does, he said, abortion will probably not be a factor.

Japanese top party in trouble

The Lockheed controversy was the topic of discussion at an emergency meeting of Liberal-Democratic leaders Saturday morning. The leaders established a special investigating committee headed by a former minister of justice and sent a member of Parliament to the Lockheed headquarters in Los Angeles and to Washington to gather information.

Over the next few days, a flock of Japanese politicians from the opposition parties is also scheduled to visit Lockheed's home office and to call on a United States Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, to glean as much information as possible.

The Liberal-Democratic leaders also decided to agree to an opposition demand that those allegedly involved in the scandal be summoned to testify before a parliamentary committee, probably in the next few days.

Meantime, the Japan Socialist Party, the main opposition group, threatened to bring debate in Parliament to an indefinite halt unless a full-scale investigation was held. This is an especially effective time of year for such a threat since the annual budget and major measures to combat the prolonged recession are on the agenda.

Whether Parliament will be able to call Kodama, 65, remained uncertain, since his whereabouts are not known. The Lockheed affair apparently began when he used his connections with Kishi in 1959 to have Japan's Air Self-Defense Force buy the Lockheed F 104 instead of another jet fighter plane it had recommended.

An additional source of embarrassment for the United States was the fact that James D. Hodgson, the American ambassador here, had a long career as a Lockheed executive before being named undersecretary and, later, secretary of labor. Hodgson has denied any involvement in the affair, and sources familiar with his career noted that as corporate vice president for industrial relations he had not been directly involved in any of the company's international operations.

The disclosures in Washington Friday, which became known here early Saturday morning because of the 14-hour time difference, centered on testimony by A.C. Kotchian, Lockheed's president and vice chairman, that he had enlisted the help of Kenji Osano to sell the L1011 Tristar jet air bus here.

The reports about Osano sent tremors through the ranks of the conservative governing party and whetted the political appetites of the opposition, because he is a confidant and financial backer of Tanaka.

Tanaka was in office in 1972, when All Nippon Airways chose between the Lockheed plane and several others for its domestic runs. The airline needed government approval, through the Ministry of Transportation, to make its choice.

Moreover, Osano is the largest individual shareholder in All Nippon Airways, with 11 million shares, which make up 2 per cent of the total.

In an attempt to aid the poor, the government ordered a $5,000 fine and one year in jail as a mandatory sentence for increasing food prices. They also issued a list of staple foods and the costs that would enable the city's poor to continue eating as long as foodstuffs held out.

Soldiers were posted Saturday night on street corners also, in a government attempt to prevent looting and damage to homes.

Prince tied to payoffs

Kotchian, in testimony Friday before the Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, gave details of how Lockheed had paid large bribes overseas to help promote its sales. The company had previously acknowledged that such payments totaled at least $22 million.

Saturday in The Hague, the Dutch capital, a spokesman for Prince Bernhard said that the prince had in the past strongly denied accusations similar to those that arose Friday and that he had no new statement to make.

Den Uyl said at his news conference that he had discussed the matter with Prince Bernhard a few months ago when the first accusations arose and that after those talks he had seen no ground for suspicion or for government action.

Prince Bernhard's name had also been linked with the Northrop Corp. earlier this year as a result of U. S. Senate hearings. During testimony that a Dutch businessman, Teengs Gerritsen, had been paid to represent Northrop interests in the Netherlands, it was disclosed that Northrop president Thomas V. Jones had at one time contacted the prince, who was an old acquaintance, for advice in choosing a Northrop representative in the Netherlands.

Prince Bernhard, who is best known to the public as the head of the World Wildlife Foundation and organizer of the Bilderberg International Affairs discussion groups, has also acted for a long time as a goodwill ambassador for Dutch business interests.

San Pedro man stabbed to death

A 19-year-old San Pedro man was stabbed to death in a possible robbery outside a Santa Ana apartment complex Saturday night, police said.

Officers said the body of Robert Salceda, 19, was found sprawled on the sidewalk in front of an apartment at 902 S. Townsend St. at 7:50 p.m.

His empty wallet was found nearby, Detective G.R. Clark said. Salceda recently moved from Santa Ana, and his San Pedro address wasn't immediately known, Clark added.

and illness have taken their toll and that Teng has decided to bow out of the premiership race voluntarily.

Hua received praise during the Cultural Revolution for his ability to organize great masses of people. Later he made a reputation for himself through his deft handling of the Lin Piao incident in 1971.

Lin, defense minister and China's heir apparent, died in a plane crash after an abortive coup attempt. Although the role he played is still unclear, Hua is considered one of the few who know all the details of the affair.

Hua, who comes from Hunan, the same province as Chairman Mao Tse-tung, is a member of China's ruling Politburo.

He ranks 11th in the Communist hierarchy and is the sixth of 12 vice premiers in the State Council.

He also is said to be one of China's top agricultural experts, credited with conducting successful water conservation and irrigation projects in 1966 as head of the Shaoshan Irrigation district command in Hunan province.

Hua's early background is unknown here.

From 1938 to 1967 he served as vice governor of Hunan province and as alternate secretary of the Communist Party's Hunan provincial committee.

According to information available in Tokyo, Hua was named a member of the Presidium of the party ninth national congress in 1969, and a member of the Central Committee. He was reelected to the party 10th Central Committee in 1973.

He was first secretary of the party's Hunan provincial committee in December 1970 and was frequently stationed in Peking, where he handled Hunan affairs from November 1971.

He became first political commissar of the Hunan military district and concurrently political commissar of the Canton military region in November 1972.

He has been a member of the Politburo since Aug. 30, 1973 and a deputy of the fourth National People's Congress and a member of the Congress Presidium since January 1975.

State doctors urged to form insurance firm

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The California Medical Association should form its own company to insure doctors against malpractice suits, the association's outgoing president said Saturday.

In his farewell address at the opening session of the CMA's policy-making House of Delegates, Dr. Carl Goetsch of Berkeley said government should be asked to intervene only when physicians are unable to solve their own problems.

"For this reason, I believe that we of the California Medical Association can help ourselves by establishing our own insurance company," he said.

Goetsch said the three liability insurance companies sponsored by California medical societies would be strengthened by a CMA-sponsored insurance company.

"Some parts of the problem can be solved only by a change in the litigious nature of our society," Goetsch said. "Some parts can be changed only by judicial reinterpretation of our present laws or by prudent legislative action."

"And there are some parts of the problem that we ourselves must solve."

The 300-member house distributed for study more than 200 resolutions. Committees studying those resolutions will make recommendations on them to the delegates Tuesday, and if approved they become part of CMA policy.

More than one-third of the resolutions deal with the malpractice issue, a CMA spokesman said.

Dr. Ralph M. Milliken of Los Angeles was scheduled to take over as president and address the delegates Tuesday.

Staff Writer

If you think men are the "stronger" sex or that they enjoy some kind of privileged status in American society, Herb Goldberg has news for you.

"The notion of masculine privilege is a fantasy," Goldberg proclaimed. "Men die younger...commit suicide three times more often than women (despite the fact that women attempt it four times more frequently)...are emotionally isolated from other men...and unduly dependent on women."

"For all their so-called 'privileges,' men experience very little joy in life. They are solitary warriors...out of touch with their own feelings...requiring less and less contact with anyone."

"The very things that are considered male in our culture are the things that lead to illness and early death...Success (society's traditional definition of masculinity) is largely an isolationist experience...and the most successful men are those who mask themselves so completely that their outer life has nothing to do with their inner feelings..."

Goldberg, a clinical psychologist and author of the recently-released "The Hazards of Being Male: Surviving the Myth of Masculine Privilege," threw these thoughts out during a day-long seminar sponsored by UCLA Extension.

In the end, he had no concrete suggestions as to what men should do to free themselves from what he calls the "male success trap." But he had plenty of arguments for why they should — and why at the same time they should be encouraging women to take responsibility for themselves and their lives, thus releasing men from the bind in which they find themselves.

"MAN'S PERCEPTION of earth mother — the passive, weak, submissive female — is nothing but a collusion between the sexes...it is role playing under intense social pressures...a situation that leads to macho, self-destructive behavior."

According to Goldberg, women today aren't changing, they're emerging; they're feeling less and less compelled to collude with men in the fantasy. Many men, however, fail to see this as a "freeing" experience and instead are threatened because it is taking away the justification for their driven, compulsive behavior.

"These men are what I call 'cardboard Goliaths,' in danger of toppling over if they're forced out of their compulsive routines," Goldberg said. And their justification for their behavior, he added, is always their wives and families.

"How many many men say they do what they do for their families?" Goldberg questioned. "How many men have no one else they can relate to? How many men rely on a woman for their only outlet for what's real inside?"

If anyone doubted Goldberg's observations, a lunchtime exercise would quickly change his mind. The results of the exercise proved overwhelmingly that men had fewer intimates of the same sex than women did. Those men who could list a close male friend or friends seemed to feel they "gave" much more than they "got."

"As a man scales the ladder of success, he becomes increasingly more isolated and suffers from the fear of being 'found out' as an imposter."

"By middle age, most men have no close friends outside their families. I might point out that women experience this same sort of thing if they develop the male success style."

GOLDBERG BELIEVES it's no wonder that this type of man seems to fall apart if his wife or lover leaves him.

"Before a man is hooked into the relationship he seems autonomous, independent, even destructive and hurtful."

"Once he's hooked in, however, he develops an almost debilitating dependency on that woman. If his wife leaves he collapses as if his energy source had been taken away — and indeed in many ways it has. He feels as if he has nothing to live for — and given the way he has lived, that may be true. He's gone from total master to total slave. He becomes like a child."

Goldberg noted that the incidence of so-called "earth mothers" leaving their spouses is increasing and that even where the man is the one who leaves — "a less frequent occurrence anymore" — he almost always has another woman waiting for him in the wings.

"I have a notion," Goldberg said, "that the reason men die earlier than women is that somewhere in their subconscious they know they must because they're afraid to live alone."

GOLDBERG'S "NOTION" aside, the fact is that men do die earlier — an average of seven years earlier according to current statistics. Goldberg noted that after the age of 60, there are only 72 men alive for every 100 women. Yet there are 105 men born for every 100 women.

"Even as youngsters, boys are more inclined to have problems than girls," Goldberg said. "Such problems as schizophrenia, autism and stuttering are three and four times more likely to occur in boys than in girls."

Goldberg presented pages and pages of other proof of the precariousness of the male condition. For men, the incidence of both suicide and institutionalization for mental problems increases with age. Even sex is hazardous. "I was reading somewhere that a man over the age of 40 who is contemplating an extramarital affair should be sure to have a thorough medical checkup. What does this say about the male condition? Over the age of 40 he can't even have sex with abandon without first having a medical clearance."

Goldberg blames no one for what has developed after what he sees as years of "men and women misinterpreting the masculine experience." He is sympathetic to women and the women's movement and called upon men to battle backlash groups ("the Fascinating Womanhooders") who wish to push men and women back into anachronistic role playing. He is sympathetic to those men who can't move from where they are because society has conditioned fluidity out of them.

"But I'm tired of is the self-hate and self-contemptuousness of the people who are leading the so-called 'men's liberation' movement," said Goldberg after reading excerpts from several of the current best-selling male liberation books. "No other group has found its liberation by denying what it is and by donning a sack cloth. If there is to be a male liberation it must be with self-love and self-growth, not with guilt and self-hate."

Males need to be freed

'Happy Fella' warms CLO

By PATRICIA de LUNA
Staff Writer

Michael Quinn seems indeed a "Most Happy Fella." That's the role he'll soon be playing for Long Beach Civic Light Opera, but from the manner of the man himself, that also seems the way he is.

Michael Quinn likes to joke. He says he always wanted to play Tony Esposito, an exuberant middle-aged Italian grape farmer from the Napa Valley who is "every inch a man," as the musical's leading character is described in the libretto.

"I figured if I waited around long enough I would be the right age and weight," he laughs.

Victoria Mallory, who plays Rosabella, the young waitress who captures Tony's heart in the restaurant and eventually goes up to his vineyard to marry him, has performed many leading soprano roles, including that of Maria in "Westside Story" during its first revival at Lincoln Center in New York.

"The part of Rosabella," she says, "is all those roles and more. I've always wanted to do Rosabella. Much happens to her. She changes."

"Most Happy Fella," a Frank Loesser musical based on Sidney Howard's "They Knew What They Wanted," is a rousing romantic comedy which requires all leading characters to sing full out. "A difficult score but one which moves beautifully," say the show's two leading stars. "It's demanding on everyone; everyone needs first-rate voices."

"The characters are nicely developed. They are interesting, deep people."

MICHAEL QUINN, a familiar face who has enjoyed and played many character roles, not only those requiring his deep baritone voice but those demanding his acting talent, says the very nature of theater is to dispel belief. And for that reason, this 20-year-old musical remains "very feasible, very believable," even today.

"It's part of the romantic nature of young girls," he says, "to exchange letters with a strange man; have pen-pals, as it were, and fall in love with a picture. It's an easy thing to accept."

The theme is very true to life, says Victoria Mallory. "Such a love story is not likely to happen in life as it does in the operetta, but it doesn't matter because of the way it is presented."

The story is basically that Tony falls in love with Rosabella in the restaurant where she is a waitress. He leaves her a love note on the back of his menu and his "amotist" (amethyst) tie pin instead of a tip.

"I cannot leave you money on the table," he writes in broken English. "You look to nice, and so I leave you my genuine amotist tie pin." Rosabella is intrigued and the two begin to correspond.

"She was-a to write to me one postcard. Then I was-a write. Then she was-a write. Then I was-a write. Then she was-a write. Then me. Then she. Then me. Then she — and now..."

Love turns to tragedy, however, when Tony deceives Rosabella by sending her a picture of his handsome foreman instead of himself. "Ah, Rosabella, what-sa use? If I was-a send you my pitch — it's-a no make love. It's-a just make laugh." And he tears his own photo in half.

This was Tony's fatal flaw, says Quinn, which led to Rosabella's infidelity and which made her "a victim of the ultimate con." This is romantic comedy, he says, but it has all the meat of a drama.

QUINN, WHO STUDIED at the New England Conservatory and was with the New York City Opera Company and the NBC TV Opera Company for several seasons, also played the judge in "Hello, Dolly." "I was amazed that show was such a success," he says. "It surprised me."

Then, "The scene with my song was cut while we were playing in Washington, maybe that's why I was surprised," he laughs.

His usual roles are the heavy or comic character parts. "I'm adaptable to the part," he adds, however. His first romantic part was as Phil in "Milk and Honey." "This is my second," he says.

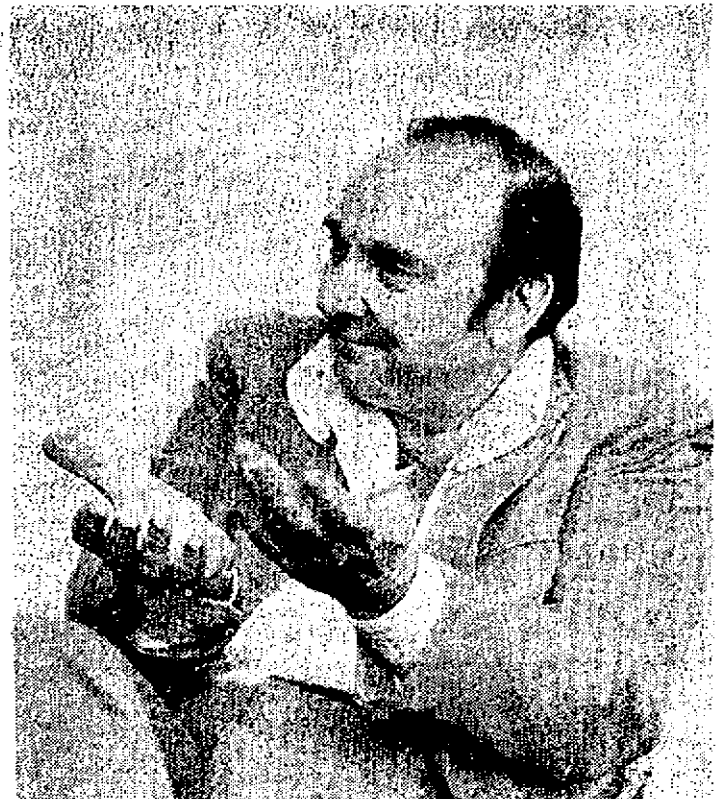

Quinn played Jud in "Oklahoma!" in Las Vegas. "I gave it a sympathetic approach. I'm sympathetic. I have a positive view of life and people and it comes through in the parts I play. People are not all black or all white. I play my roles that way, otherwise the character is one-dimensional."

For this reason, he enjoys what he sees as the "challenge of Tony," a vineyard owner who lacks self confidence. "I have to reconcile his astuteness as a

Q: Is it true that Buddy Hackett once lost his permit to carry a gun in Miami? If so, what's the story? — Mr. and Mrs. Max Ade, St. Louis.

A: A simple one. Buddy was gifted with a pearl-handled .38 after doing a benefit show for the Miami Beach Police and Firemen's Association. Appearing in person before the Dade County inspectors to qualify for a permit, the comedian (a cop buff, who's also expert with a pistol) jokingly shot out a lightbulb. The authorities didn't laugh. They took his gun away, and didn't issue a permit. He got both back when he left town, however.

Q: Vacationing in Honolulu, we were told the Hawaiians had a premonition that Amelia Earhart would be lost on her flight around the world in 1937. What's the story? — Ruth and Chuck Jacobson, Boynton Beach, Fla.

A: During the stopover in Hawaii by Miss Earhart and her navigator Fred Noonan, a plaque was dedicated to the intrepid woman flyer. When originally set in place, the stone bearing the plaque broke from the foundation and fell face downward, arousing an old Hawaiian superstition that she would never return to the islands.

Cancer bout brings searing indictment of M.D.s

Most books by celebrities should only be read between Oxydol commercials. Cocktail party chatter without the benefit of alcohol.

That's because: (1) Most celebrities are interested only in themselves, a fact that poisons the stories of their lives with an air of self-indulgence that is about as relevant to mankind as wallpaper paste; (2) most show-biz autobiographies are not so much written as phoned in from a cabana at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Hildegard Knef is a noble, enlightening exception.

Her first book, "The Gift Horse," an international bestseller to this day, was about her childhood under Hitler, the ravages of war and how she got to America, where she eventually became the toast of Broadway in Cole Porter's "Silk Stockings." Her new book, "The Verdict," which has already been translated into 18 languages, goes off like a grenade in your hands. After 56 operations for cancer, she has written a blistering saga of survival without the slightest trace of self-pity.

She's no Joan of Arc and there's none of that sad, mawkish sentimentality that makes martyrs out of mortals. Yet these two books form one of the most moving and involving chronicles of life I have ever read, combining a richness of style (Knef knows so much about the new journalism she could teach Tom Wolfe and all the rest of us a few things) with the emotional development of a hypnotically structured novel. This gorgeous woman with bottle-green eyes that see through everything has lived through Hell and written about it clearly.

"She's the best thing that ever came out of Germany," says Stuart Schulberg, producer of NBC's "Today" show, who has known her since he was a G.I. in Berlin after the war.

"She's Mother Courage," says Marlene Dietrich,

the only other German who was ever in the same league.

BUT DIETRICH was a creation. Knef is a reality. She is the perfect wedding of intellect and emotion. Incapable of a dishonest response or a phony ideal. She's like a tree. No matter how many times you chop away at its branches, it stands proud and tall. No wonder so many men have loved her, from Cole Porter to Henry Miller. She came to New York recently to talk about her books and her life, and everyone who met her fell in love again. She turned winter to spring.

She shook all the hands, submitted to all interviews, wore lavish fashions, posed for thousands of

rex

photos, then wept like a schoolgirl when she hears Sylvia Syms sing love songs in the Hotel Carlyle bar. She's been pronounced dead so many times she has acquired a love of life we could all learn something from.

"There is only one capitol of the world," she said, "and that is New York. I get very excited when I am here. But in the long run, I know New York eats you. Writing is a crocodile that eats up your time. It's an anaconda of the worst sort. A book takes two years out of my life. I can't do that in New York because I can't concentrate here. So I always go home. But America is always in my heart."

She has three completely different, successful professions. She is considered the greatest actress to emerge from the post-war German film industry. Author, singer and writer of more than 200 songs. A new book of poetry and a forthcoming novel. In Europe, she's one of the hottest recording stars alive. She doesn't have time to get sick, yet most of the money she's made has gone for doctor bills.

"I WROTE 'THE VERDICT' because we spend billions to fly to the moon just to bring back a little bag of rocks, yet with the illnesses that descend upon us like the plague we act like primitive tribes in Africa doing a rain dance. If only half the money we spend on weapons in the world could be spent on research, we would be much better off.

"I also find it disgusting the way doctors treat patients. Physical illness does not make you an idiot. They have no personal feelings. A breast or a foot is examined like a pack of cigarettes. They are responsible for the lives of others, yet they go on forever and nobody checks them out to see what they are doing, whereas a pilot, who is also responsible for the lives of others, must undergo rigorous tests every six months.

"Now why do we accept every man in a white smock who looks at us like a ham sandwich just because he is scientific about it? I don't think medicine is a science, because you go to two doctors with the same illness and you get two different verdicts. Our faces are different, and so are our insides. I didn't write the book as a revenge to smash all doctors, but as a hymn to life that might help others."

"The Verdict" is now required reading in some medical schools and hospitals. Knef knows what she's writing about. Infantile paralysis in childhood followed by malnutrition during the war led to "a snowball that turned into an avalanche": hepatitis, colitis, gallstones, rheumatic fever, a ruptured appendix, a hysterectomy and a mastectomy, among other ills.

"I have also had the misfortune to fall into the hands of doctors who would like to have a new house in Ibiza and figured I'm the perfect patient to finance it, forgetting totally that I have to work very hard for every dime I earn. I didn't inherit any money, and I'm not independently wealthy. Then they operated on me whether I needed it or not. I have never found one doctor who said, 'I took out your appendix, it was perfectly in order and I made a mistake.'

"A lot of things that had been in order have been put in disorder. For example, when my daughter Christina was born, I was happy as a cow and looked like a bus and everything was marvelous. Then she came early, and the way they handled it was so demented it started a whole series of complications from which I still have not recovered.

"The anesthetist was late so they let me lie there in agony, then performed an unnecessary female operation that now prevents me from having any more children. I didn't even know what was happening. When you are lying there in pain with the belly open, it's not the time to ask questions, and this happens to thousands of women."

SHE HAS SURVIVED the perils of Job, yet it has not made her cynical or apathetic. "I hate pity. Help helps, but not pity. I have been so close to death that now just growing old would be a luxury. I have learned the hard way to love life each day." She knocks on wood. "I have a clean bill of health now, so I live each minute at a time. I was trained and

Mothproof your woolens

Now that it's nearly time to pack away woolens for the spring and summer months, you should be thinking about a good moth repellent. Those pesky critters go through a wardrobe leaving nothing but chewed-up possessions.

When the time comes to wear that favorite sweater (perhaps a Christmas present) it may be a see-through style because the moths found it a favorite, too. Here's a simple, inexpensive way to protect your woolens.

Cut cardboard strips about two inches by four inches and punch a hole near the center of the top edge. Now you'll need one pound of PARADICHLOROBENZENE (don't let this seven-syllable word scare you; ask for moth crystals at your hardware store and you'll have it). Put the Paradichlorobenzene in the top of a double boiler (the amount depends on how many cards you plan to coat) and turn on heat. When the material has melted dip the cards into it repeatedly, allowing cooling between each dip, until a coating of about one-fourth inch has built up on each side of the card. Note: PARADICHLOROBENZENE is moderately toxic and vapors are irritating to eyes. Melt in a well-ventilated area such as under a stove exhaust fan. Store excess material in airtight glass or plastic jar.

The cost of making your own moth repellent is seven cents an ounce. Compare to moth repellent cards available at retail stores. You'll be surprised at how much you save with so little effort.

Note: Material costs are based on the prices at retail outlets of national drug, grocery and hardware chains. These costs will vary, depending on the geographic area. If you wish to make up a larger quantity — and save even more — buy your materials at a chemical supply company. (Like any chemical product you use at home, you should store this one safely, label it — listing ingredients and noting any cautions — and keep it out of reach of children.)

Remember when...

The year was 1953. The aircraft straining against its brakes as the flight crew revved up four powerful piston engines on the runway at Los Angeles. It was a DC6B, latest in a long line of Douglas Commercial transports. The destination was Paris and the objective was to set a new world record by flying the 5,700 miles to France without an intermediate stop.

Carrying a crew of seven and a 101,080-pound payload at takeoff, the DC6B consumed most of the Memorial Day weekend by flying a Great Circle Route over Canada and Greenland to Europe in 20 hours and 28 minutes. At takeoff it carried 6,755 gallons of fuel reduced in volume by refrigeration before being pumped into the wing tanks.

The DC6B was the second of three ordered by Transports Aeriens Intercontinentaux, an international carrier now incorporated in UTA French Airlines. The airliner was capable of a top speed of 360 miles an hour and cruised at 315.

While the flight was planned as an official attempt to set a distance record for commercial aircraft, there was no delay in the scheduled delivery date of May 28 to wait for more favorable weather. Strong headwinds generated by a storm over Labrador slowed the flight, canceling gains from tailwinds up to that point.

Douglas chief pilot John Martin and two other company pilots, Larry Peyton and Paul Patton, were aboard with the four-man French crew. The flight far surpassed the previous distance record of 4,000 miles, set only four months earlier by a Scandinavian Airlines System DC6B over a near-polar route between New York and Stockholm.

SEVENTEEN YEARS and several generations of Douglas transports later, a giant jetliner bearing the insignia DC10 quietly tested its engines at the end of the long diagonal runway at Long Beach Airport. Each of its three whispering fanjets packed more propulsive power than all four of the DC6B propeller engines.

The new Jumbo jet was poised for its maiden flight. Five weeks earlier it had been introduced publicly at rollout ceremonies by James S. McDonnell and Donald W. Douglas, chairman and honorary chairman of the Douglas Aircraft Co. parent corporation. U.S. Vice President Spiro T. Agnew joined the aviation industry leaders in signaling the first DC10 into view at the final assembly hangar on the west side of Long Beach Airport.

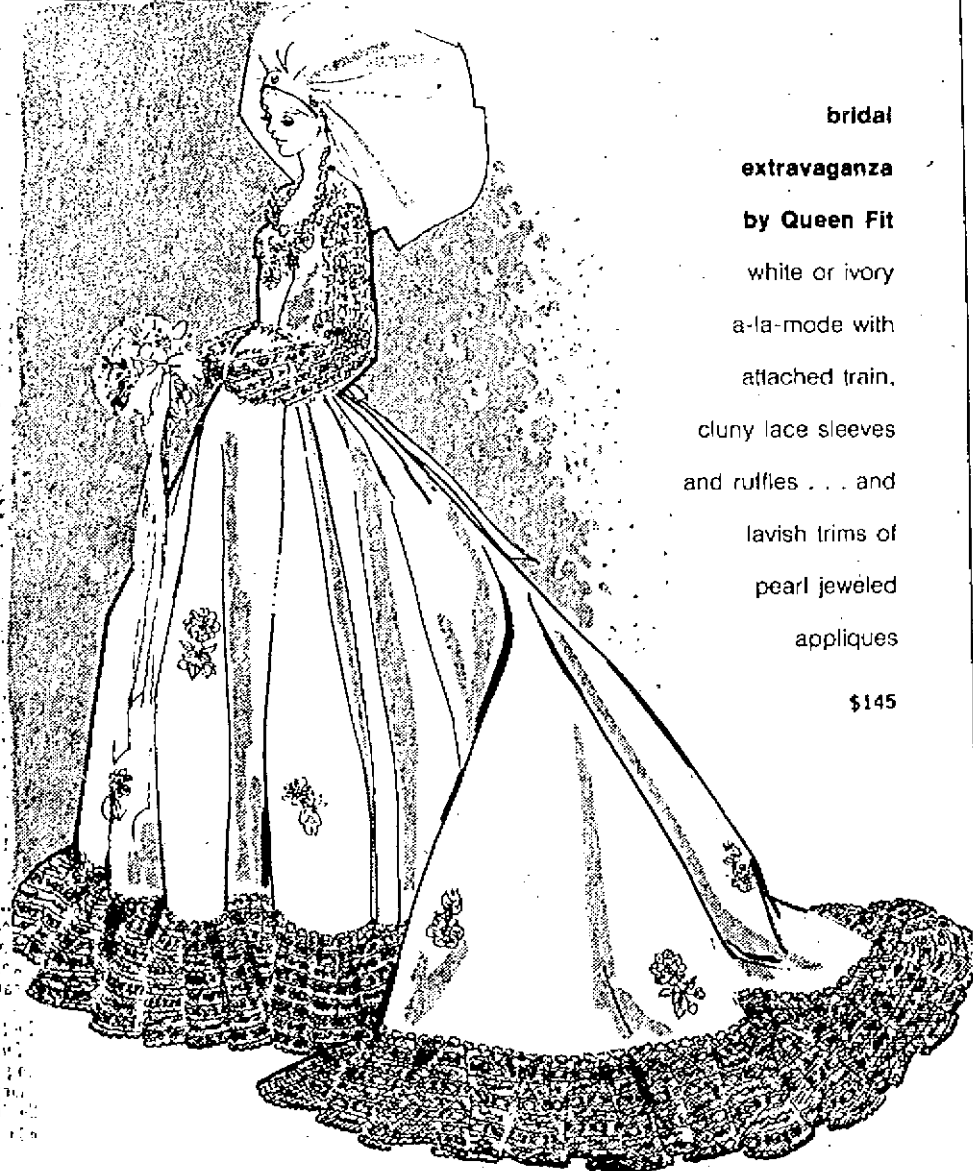

Now, on August 29, 1970, the same aircraft was ready for the supreme test. Midway along the two-mile runway, a group of newsmen and company officials waited expectantly. Photographers checked focus and exposure settings.

In the cockpit, DC10 project pilot Clifford L. Stout advanced the three engine throttle controls and 340,000 pounds of aircraft, fuel, ballast and test equipment began to roll. Co-pilot Harris C. Van Valkenburg called out speed readings as the jet raced toward the observers. Flight engineer John D. Chamberlain and test equipment engineer Shojun Yukawa monitored their instruments.

No exhaust smoke was visible when Stout executed the function of rotation and lifted the nose wheel of the DC10 4,950 feet down the runway, within inches of the predicted takeoff point. The initial shakedown flight of three hours and 26 minutes was a preview demonstration of today's routine DC10 performance on nonstop flights from Los Angeles to Europe in half the time of the 1953 DC6B record. — HERB SHANNON.

Love makes world go 'round

COUPLE OF international weddings make the news today.

Scene One opens in Honolulu last July when the yachts from the Trans Pacific Yacht Race arrived there.

Bob Ellis, son of Wilson High School Principal Bob and Mollie Ellis, was one of the crew members.

While visiting the enchanted isle, he met and became enchanted with a Honolulu resident, Jill Dodge.

The yacht, Sorecery, owned and skippered by Jake Wood of Van Nuys, was entered in the Honolulu to Okinawa race sponsored by the Nippon Yacht Club.

Jill and Bob were fellow crew members and the sea and the Sorecery cast a magic spell over the two. The yacht won the race and Bob won a bride.

They were married in Okinawa with television and press coverage and a reception given by the Japanese Expo officials.

Scene Two takes place at the Long Beach Yacht Club recently where the Ellises feted the newlywed Ellises with a reception for 100 family and friends.

Jill's dad had offered to arrange to have flowers sent from the islands for the fete. He not only sent the flowers but hopped on a plane and surprised everyone by appearing at the reception.

Family members included young Bob's grandmother, Mary Ellis, an uncle, George Ellis and an aunt Dorothy Ricketts and her husband, Jim.

Among others were Vice Mayor Jim Wilson and Audrey, Don and Mary Kinsler of Pasadena, Margaret Felkley, Denny and Bea Anternore and Bob Edmunds with daughter, Lisa.

And from their own island homes, Santa Catalina, came Leo and Ethel Zager and Blackie and Judy Schatan.

DEBRA BLAZE became Mrs. Anthony Temple in an international ceremony in Stavanger, Norway.

Debra is the daughter of Henry Blaze and Vina Blaze both of Long Beach.

She met her English-born bridegroom while stationed in Norway as a flight attendant for TWA. He is a professional photographer in Stavanger.

carolyn mcdowell

When wedding plans began to form, most Vina went to England to meet Anthony's family and to give her blessing to the intended marriage which was solemnized in the Bahai faith.

Participating in the vow exchange were members of the Bahai faith from Norway, Sweden, South Africa and the United States.

The couple had an extended honeymoon. They traveled to England, and Chicago, Ill., then to Long Beach where Debra is an alumna of Millikan High School. She also attended UC at Santa Barbara and its campus in Norway. They returned to make a first home in Stavanger after a stop in Hawaii.

FIFTY CANDLES on a birthday cake caused a surprise party for Dr. Dick Lewis, incoming president of the Harbor Dental Society.

Dick was fooled into believing that Krete Wojdak was having a small housewarming for her new apartment in Marina Pacifica. His wife, Dee, with the help of Krete, had surreptitiously made 800 canapés, along with sundry other goodies for the 100 guests who awaited Dick in the recreation room at M.P.

Party was themed "Second Childhood" and featured magician Danny Rouzer from the Magic Castle.

Dee was assisted by Jane Willey who came with her son, Kenny, who served as official photographer and Jeri Giallanza with husband, Chuck.

Among Harbor Dental Society members were Past President Dr. Marty and Mimi Geron. Hilda Donaldson stood in for her husband, Earl, also a past president.

The Lewises live on La Linda Drive in the Los Cerritos area and the neighbors have nicknamed themselves "The Drivers."

Drivers on hand to offer a birthday salute were former Councilman Ted Cruchley and his wife, Sue, Lincoln and Judy Ball, Glenn and Ann Burgeron, Marvin Cloyd, Jerry and Pat Flanagan, Fred and Connie Groff, Bea Holderness and Lloyd and Claudine Shidler.

If you see a car around town with the license plates 2BOOBY, that's Dick. For reason not explained, Dee calls him that and that's what it said on the decorated cake.

Mirrors retain their popularity

By ELLEN ESHBACH
Chicago Tribune

Cleopatra used mirrors as a grooming aid and, according to the legend, had her slaves polish a piece of bronze daily so she could see her reflected beauty.

But the modern woman knows mirrors can serve a decorative function, too, and she's using everything from tiny squares to wall mirrors in her home.

For centuries the use of reflective glass in decoration was a luxury only the rich could afford. In Venice, where the blown-glass technique of making mirrors was discovered, aristocrats cherished their silver-foil-backed glasses as an item of rank.

In France, decorative mirrors became the vogue after huge glasses were installed in the Hall of Mirrors at the Palace of Versailles. The spacious and luxurious effect they gave did not go unnoticed, and soon mirrors were the mark of elegance in interiors.

MIRRORS were not important in the decoration of American homes until the late 1700s, when Chippendale, Adam, and Hepplewhite styles were handicrafted with scrolled tops, decorations of eagles and flowers, and painted scenes.

The pier glass was the proof of a fashionable decor during Victorian times. Such mirrors were set in front of the piers, or columns, between windows, while others appeared over mantels and were built into the dining room sideboard or buffet.

Today, the variety of colors, patterns, textures, and styles far exceeds that found in the past. Oriental, Queen Anne, contemporary, Federal, Art Deco, and Spanish mirror frames are among those being created from materials as diverse as wrought iron, leather, shells, aluminum, antiqued wood, upholstery, plastic, and ceramic tile.

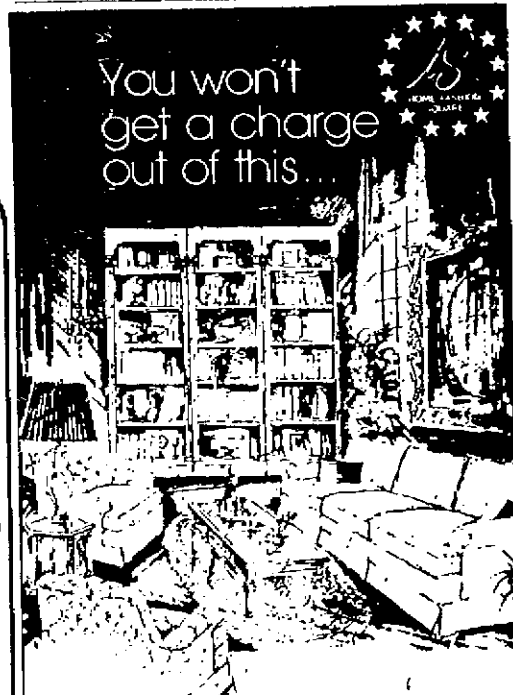

SHAPES are more than rectangles and squares, too; ovals, free-forms, and geometries abound, and many mirrors are three dimensional. Mirror glass itself can be smoked, antiqued, silk-screened, or veined, as well as clear.

Though wide availability has robbed mirror of its snob appeal, these new styles have found new functions.

In smaller homes mirrors make rooms look larger. A narrow hallway or small bathroom will seem more spacious if one or more walls feature large or full-wall mirrors. Beautiful mirrors also reflect the beauty of other furnishings, making a floral arrangement grow into a garden or revealing otherwise-hidden sides of sculptures, for example. And they can reflect light to brighten a room.

Because it can involve its surroundings, a mirror misses if it reflects a blank wall or a poor view, say, of the kitchen from the dining room or the bathroom from a bedroom. Also avoid hanging mirrors so low over seating pieces that they reflect the backs of people's heads or that other guests end up staring at themselves.

Many value stoneware

Q. "When did cobalt blue designs become fashionable on American stoneware?" — Vi, Brockton, Mass.

A. Country potters were busy supplying their rural clientele with utilitarian stoneware objects from the mid-1700s onward. Originally their pieces were unornamented, but by the early 1800s traces of cobalt to escalate in value faster than you can say "lights, camera, action!"

Q. "Please assist us in appraising our collection of old tobacco tins and containers." — Dick & Ester, Hampton, Va.

A. Devotees of American advertising articles positively light up at the sight of an eye-catching tobacco tin. They appeared in a variety of fascinating sizes and shapes and in colorful designs following the introduction of the tin printing machine in the 1870s. Lunch boxes, pocket tins, store canisters and other containers captivate collectors. Tobacco tin value guide: Dan Patch lunch box, $38; Dill's Best pocket tin, $8; Home Comfort pail, $26; Idle Hour Cut Plug pocket tin, $30; Summertime store canister, $34; Union Leader Cut Plug lunch box, $15.

Q. "Was the Northwood Glass Company the sole producer of American custard glass?" — Mrs. F. M., Leesburg, Fla.

A. This coveted opaque glass, also known as Butterilk glass, was introduced in the 1880s. Although the renowned Northwood factory made and marked many pieces with their familiar "N" within a diamond trademark, it was also marketed by other equally important American glasshouses. The Heisey Glass Company, Jefferson Glass Company and the Fenton Art Glass Company also produced that delicious collectible custard glass. Value guide: Argonaut Shell pattern water pitcher, $240.

blue began appearing. As the century progressed bolder designs were executed either by free-hand painting or with stenciled patterns. Birds, flowers, insects, animals, houses, leaves, figures and patriotic symbols led the parade of popular motifs. A maker's name, location or a date make a piece of stoneware doubly salable. The more pronounced the cobalt blue decoration, the higher the value. Stoneware value guide: Jar, cobalt blue bird decor, 3 gallon, $70.

Q. "Are movie star paperdolls worthless once they have been cut?" — Jean, Tulsa, Okla.

A. People with a passion for old paperdolls prefer those in uncut condition, but will rarely pass up a bargain in those which have already surrendered to the seissor set. This holds true of film star paperdolls and all other types. A complete 1937 book, "All Aboard for Shut Eye Town", featuring the Dionne Quintuplets sells for approximately $30. Few flea market fans can resist a single Alice Faye, Claudette Colbert, Betty Grable or Deanna Durbin doll with several costume changes particularly if the price hovers between $5 and $8. These nostalgic favorites are likely

Brico to conduct

An elite among a group of elites — internationally famous women conductors — will direct Long Beach Symphony's Feb. 22 concert at 8:30 p.m. in Long Beach City College Auditorium, Clark Avenue and Harvey Way.

She is Antonia Brico and her appearance in Long Beach is the result of an unusual situation.

The symphony's permanent conductor, Alberto Bolet, was to direct the scheduled First Chair Night concert. However, the Miami Beach Symphony has had financial problems, frequent staff changes and, at present, has no permanent conductor.

Hoping to solve some of its financial difficulties at least, the Miami Symphony asked Alberto Bolet to conduct in February with his famous brother, pianist Jorge Bolet, as guest artist. Long Beach Symphony Association agreed, providing a conductor of outstanding reputation could be found to take over the Long Beach concert.

This is one of those stories where all ends happily.

Long Beach Symphony manager John Hyer immediately phoned Antonia Brico at her home in Denver and it was she who answered — no tiresome red tape to untangle with managers or secretaries. The gracious Madame Brico at once agreed to the Long Beach date.

That left Alberto Bolet free to accept the Miami offer and the Bolet concerts there are completely sold out, hopefully to replenish the Miami Symphony's coffers enough to at least partially solve its problems.

THE AMAZING CAREER of Brico was revived following the 1973 Academy Award nominated documentary, "Antonia: A Portrait of the Woman," made by Brico's one-time piano student Judy Collins, now one of the most popular singers of her time. It was directed by Jill Godmilow and had tremendous impact.

Later Brico told Bill Marvel of the National Observer, "I thought it was just a film for Judy's private consumption. If I had known, why I would have been tied in knots."

Not likely. Not after the spunky life this 73-year-old musician has led. Born in the Netherlands, she was brought as a child to the United States by foster parents and graduated from UC Berkeley. But she was determined to become a conductor, an uncommon ambition for a woman at that time. She became the first American to graduate from the Master School of Conducting at the Berlin State Academy of Music at the University of Berlin. That was in 1929. She went on to study with Jean Sibelius, Albert Schweitzer, Wilhelm Furtwangler and Bruno Walter.

But it never was easy going. Men, she says philosophically, never resented a woman conductor. It was the women sponsors who preferred a handsome male conductor. This she notes without bitterness, but a bit wryly. She was years ahead of her time — a woman whose genius, whose musicianship was never in question. The problem was just that she was a woman.

Since the 1973 film, her career has rebounded. Among her 1975 engagements were those with the Oakland Symphony at Berkeley, the Brico Symphony in Denver and the Colorado Celebration of the Arts with the Brico Symphony in Denver, Hollywood Bowl, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Mostly Mozart Festival at Lincoln Center, the National Symphony Orchestra at Kennedy Center and the Denver Symphony.

If you don't have a ticket to the Feb. 22 concert, hurry! It's certain to be a major event. Call the symphony office, 121 Linden Ave.

Renoir art to hang at LBSU

By ELISE EMERY
Arts Editor

For the first time, the public may see the most comprehensive private collection of prints by Auguste Renoir when the exhibit opens in the Art Galleries of Long Beach State University Tuesday, Feb. 17. It will hang through March 14.

There are more than 50 prints in this collection of Dr. Joseph G. Stella, all of them documented by the recent publication "The Graphic Work of Renoir" which the collector wrote. Catalogue notes are by Robert Allen of the New York Cultural Center which has prepared the prints for travel throughout the United States. The show's only West Coast exhibit will be this one in Long Beach.

After the 7 p.m. opening Feb. 17, Allen will speak on "Renoir and the French Impressionist Printmakers" at 8 p.m. in the LBSU Studio Theater. The public is invited to both the opening and lecture without charge.

Gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and from 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays. Week-day parking is available to the public for 60 cents on the lot south of Seventh Street. All LBSU lots are open to the public without charge on Sundays.

RARE INDIAN TEMPLE hangings from the Rajasthan region are on view for the first time in Los Angeles at Occidental Center, 1150 S. Olive St. They are part of a three-year travelling exhibition organized by the American Federation of Arts and may be seen through March 11.

The 10 hangings are from the private collection of Karl Manna of New York. A definitive catalogue, "Rajasthani Temple Hangings of the Krishna Cult" has been written about this collection by Robert Skelton, keeper of the Indian Section of the Victoria and Albert Museum in London.

Executed during the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries in Rajasthan, northwestern India, the hangings are made of cloth painted with vivid colors. They celebrate the deity Krishna, subject of Hindu sect worship. The cult from which the hangings in this exhibition come, known as the Vallabha-charis, worships Krishna in private temples designed like long, rambling palaces with many courtyards and shrines. The exhibition is free and open to the public from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. seven days a week.

THE PAGEANTRY and magnificence of 18th century France is shown in "18th Century France: the Height of Fashion" at the J. Paul Getty Museum, 17985 Pacific Coast Highway, Malibu. Nine elaborate French costumes, on loan from Los Angeles County Museum of Art, mirror the exquisite furniture and decorative arts collection at the Getty Museum.

HEIGHT OF FASHION in 18th century France was this elegant costume. Borrowed from Los Angeles County Museum of Art, it is among men's and women's apparel displayed at the J. Paul Getty Museum.

Made of velvet, silk, satin, lace, and adorned with embroidery and fine detailing, the costumes add a new dimension to the Getty's collection of French decorative arts.

"When we see the incredible clothing worn by the nobility from the French court, the elaborate and ornate furniture becomes more comprehensible. Together, the clothing and furniture create a feeling for the splendor of 18th century France," commented Gillian Wilson, curator of decorative arts.

The four men's costumes and five women's gowns date from 1735 to 1810. There is no admission charge but advance reservations are suggested to guarantee parking and admission. Reservations may be requested by writing or telephoning the museum which is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays. The display will continue through April 20.

LONG BEACH CITY COLLEGE has a new director for its art gallery on the Liberal Arts Campus, 4901 E. Carson St. He is Michel Daniel who says that he plans to use his contacts as a professional artist and art educator to draw major exhibits.

"Colleges are in the unique position of being educative to the entire student body and the community as well as to art students. For that reason, I feel it is important to exhibit a wide variety of art forms from many periods. Our gallery will present contemporary art from the community and from around the world as well as historical and ethnic art."

Daniel, 29, comes to LBCC after three-and-a-half years as gallery director and studio arts instructor at Citrus College in Azusa. He has taught studio arts classes at Cerritos and Rio Hondo Colleges, Long Beach State University and LBCC, where he will resume teaching next fall in addition to his gallery duties. A Seal Beach resident, Daniel has a world studio in Long Beach.

THIRTEEN subjects will be offered in classes for high school students and adults at Los Beach Museum of Art, 2300 E. Ocean Blvd. Day and evening classes are scheduled; tuition ranges from $25 to $40 for non-members and from $22 to $36 for museum members. A sample of topics includes mixed media, doll construction, drawing, bronze casting and stained glass. For complete listing and details, consult the museum.

Registration for classes which will begin the week of Feb. 23, may be made by mail, or in person at the first class meeting. Forms are available at the museum and most Long Beach Public Libraries.

Trio in chamber bill

Soprano Mary Rawcliffe, clarinetist John Gates, and pianist Raul Herrera Thursday will play the fifth chamber music program of the season in the Long Beach Museum of Art series. Admission is free.

Beginning at 8 p.m. in Burnett Branch Library, 560 E. Hill St., they will play music by Mozart, Louis Spohr, Gordon Jacob, Maurice Ravel and Franz Schubert.

Each of the artists has had extensive training and concert experience in this country and abroad. Rawcliffe twice was semi-finalist in the Metropolitan Opera Auditions. Gates is preparing an album of French clarinet music. Herrera, a native of Los Angeles appears frequently in chamber music concerts.

IN-SIGHTS

How hard it is to ask for help

The voice on the phone was hesitant, plaintive. "Wait, I've never done anything like this before. And I'm not sure what to do. I just know that I can't do any more by myself. Can you help me?"

This was an old friend, a proud man who had pulled himself up by his bootstraps and made a success in business. But his life was falling apart. He was

dr. walt menninger

angry, discouraged, unable to sleep; he couldn't sort out his thoughts and feelings. Most troubling of all: he hated to admit that he couldn't solve the problems by himself.

He had been suffering for some time before he called me. But he just hadn't been able to ask anyone for help. During his childhood, he learned you couldn't really count on others to look after you. If you did, you were weak and vulnerable. So he had to do it by himself. Now, when his life was becoming a shambles and his wife had filed for divorce, he called for help.

When things are going well, you may not think of having to ask for help. But if you are working on an important project and something goes wrong, what does it take for you to ask for assistance? If you are digging a well and the ground gives way beneath you, how long do you wait before crying for help? If you're having chills and a fever, how long do you suffer before you call the doctor?

MOST PEOPLE have a strong drive to be independent; to need help from someone else may seem galling and demeaning. Not so for many of the pioneers. They realized that survival in the wilderness or on the plains was chancy and often required mutual support. People joined together to help those who were overwhelmed. Many rural citizens still respect this principle. Yet there is today a prevailing attitude that one should suffer in silence. There is a fear of ridicule, for indeed people who require welfare support or who complain too much are often put down.

I know some people whose reluctance to ask for help includes going to see a doctor, even when they are quite ill. Most people, when physically ill, are able to admit their limits without feeling demeaned.

But when the problems are mental or emotional, it's different. Generally, the view is that we should be able to manage our mental and emotional problems by ourselves, even when you feel overwhelmed by anxiety or discouragement or puzzlement. How tragic that view can be.

Pride is one reason people may not seek help. But there are other reasons — a loss of self-esteem or the wish to avoid a sense of being beholden or obligated.

Many complicated feelings can be involved — superiority and inferiority, power and impotence, control and authority, punishment and guilt.

Personal integrity is another part of the problem. One young man shared with me the feeling that if he even discussed how to solve his problems with someone else, he wouldn't be solving the problem. Rather, someone else would be making the decision, not he.

IT IS A COMMON fallacy that the doctor cures illness, or the therapist solves problems. In reality, the doctor only helps you cure yourself; his ministrations and medication simply help the body to cure itself. And much psychotherapy is directed to help the patient have a broader perspective so he can more effectively solve his own problems.

We place great emphasis on teaching children to give and share with others. We may fail in teaching them to receive equally well, to be able to ask for and gratefully accept help when it is needed, without feeling demeaned or destroyed.

The survival of civilization is not a one-man or one-woman operation; it is a cooperative effort. We require assistance when we are born, and it takes others to bury us when we are dead. In between, we should try to avoid being trapped into thinking that we must go it alone all the time. Asking for help may be extremely hard, but yet the best course of action for all concerned.

EIGHT WIDELY held beliefs about differences between the sexes are nothing but myths.

This is revealed in a Stanford University Press book, "The Psychology of Sex Differences," by Prof. Eleanor Maccoby and research associate Carol Nagy Jacklin of Stanford University.

Here are some of the findings based on a review of more than 1,400 studies:

Myth No. 1: Girls are more social than boys.

Facts: The two sexes are equally interested in such social stimuli as human faces and voices. Boys congregate in larger groups. Girls associate in pairs or small groups of children their own age.

Myth No. 2: Girls are more suggestible than boys.

Fact: No differences.

Myth No. 3: Girls have lower self-esteem than boys.

Fact: Boys and girls are very similar in overall self-satisfaction and self-confidence throughout childhood and adolescence.

Myth No. 4: Girls lack motivation to achieve.

Fact: When researchers observe behavior that indicates a motive to achieve, they find no sex differences or find girls to be superior.

Myth No. 5: Girls are better at rote learning and simple repetitive tasks.

Boys are better at high-level tasks that require them to inhibit previously learned responses.

Facts: Neither sex is more susceptible to simple conditioning. Neither sex excels in rote learning tasks, such as learning to associate one word with another. Boys and girls are equally proficient at tasks that call on them to inhibit various responses.

Myth No. 6: Boys are more analytic than girls.

Fact: The sexes do not differ on tests that measure one's ability to analyze.

Myth No. 7: Girls are more affected by heredity, boys by environment.

Facts: Male identical twins are intellectually more alike than female identical twins, but the two sexes resemble their parents to the same degree. If learning is the primary means by which the environment affects us, then the two sexes are equivalent in this regard.

Myth No. 8: Girls are auditory, boys visual.

Facts: Male and female infants do not seem to respond differently to sounds. At most ages, boys and girls are equally adept at discriminating speech sounds. The sexes also seem to RECENTLY RELEASED: KwellSpray, a spray preparation that kills head, body and pubic (crab) lice and their ova. It works on clothing, furniture, towels, bedding and other inanimate objects.

It is available at drug counters without prescription.

The problem of lice is growing. There were some three million cases in the United States, according to a recent report to the American Medical Association.

Although complete control of lice is normally achieved with the use of one per cent gamma benzene hexachloride (Kwell), reinfestation often occurs unless the sources of contamination are eliminated.

KwellSpray was developed for this purpose.

The manufacturer recommends spraying clothing and underclothing with KwellSpray before laundering or dry cleaning. It's also suggested that mattresses and upholstered furniture be sprayed and allowed to dry thoroughly before they are used.

The product is not indicated for use on skin or hair of humans or animals. Related products are available for that purpose.

SEAT BELT USE remains low, researchers find.

In a study in one major metropolitan area, it was found that motorists were unprotected by lap or shoulder belts in almost two-thirds of the 1975 model cars.

Installation of buzzer-light reminder systems and starter-interlock systems have had little effect on belt use.

be alike in ability to discriminate (visually).

On the other hand, research shows that four sex differences are fairly well established. They are:

Difference No. 1: Males are more aggressive than females.

A sex difference in aggression has been observed in all cultures. Boys are more aggressive physically and verbally.

Difference No. 2: Girls have greater verbal ability than boys.

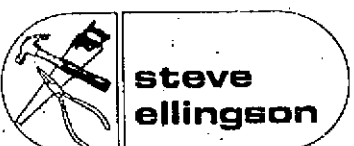

The sexes are similar in their verbal abilities from preschool to early adolescence. But at about 11, they begin to diverge. Female superiority increases through high school and possibly beyond.

Difference No. 3: Boys excel in visual-spatial ability.

This ability involves the visual perception of figures or other objects in space and how they are related to each other. Male superiority appears fairly consistent in adolescence, increasing through the high school years.

Difference No. 4: Boys excel in mathematical ability.

At about age 12 or 13, boys' mathematical skills increase faster than girls.

The workshop

Run your hand over an old handcrafted piece of American furniture. The warmth of the wood and the timeless styling are irresistible. No one with a sense of history can fail to appreciate the simple, honest craftsmanship of our early American furniture makers. There is certainly great beauty and durability in these old wood pieces... and always function.

One of the most popular of these old treasures is the dry sink. Originally these held water for washing dishes, but today's version can be adapted to countless uses. For the stereo buff, it's an excellent place to house speakers and components. It may also be used for storing linens, silver and things of that kind. If you need a liquor cabinet, here's a dandy. Many folks install a copper tray in the top area and use it for a planter. The shelves in the bottom may be adjusted to accommodate many different size items.

Here's a project that any amateur can undertake with our easy-to-follow pattern. A list of required materials (you'll probably use pine plywood) is included along with easy-to-understand directions and illustrations. The cost, when you build it yourself, is only a fraction of what it would be if you were to purchase it.

To obtain the full-size pattern No. 307 for this Dry Sink, send $1.50 (includes first class postage and handling). Mail your check, cash or money order to: Steve Ellingson, Long Beach Independent Press Telegram Pattern Dept., P.O. Box 2383, Van Nuys, Ca. 91409.

DEAR ABBY

Wife on bottom of priority list

DEAR ABBY: My husband is being used by his family, only he can't see it.

He works six days a week, and I like to plan something for us to do together on his day off.

Well, three weeks ago, his mother called on his

of wood, so my husband, the fool, spent his whole day off helping his brother.

I finally got mad and told him that he was putting his family before me, and he said, "Well, I've known them for 21 years, and I've known you only a had always thought was married asked me for a date. I turned him down, saying I do not date married men.

He then told me that he was not really "married" because he is a Catholic and he was married by a justice of the peace, so in the eyes of the Church he is single.

Is that right? Please let me know because it's against my principles to go out with married men. Thank you. — PLAYING IT SAFE

DEAR PLAYING: Unless this man obtained a legal divorce, in the eyes of the LAW he is married.

DEAR ABBY: Clyde and I have been dating for eight months. We love each other very much and have talked about getting married.

We eat out on weekends and take turns paying for the meal. (We both have good jobs.) Here's the problem:

I am a very slow eater, and Clyde eats fast. While I'm eating my first course, Clyde eats his, plus his salad, and then he eats my salad, too.

When the main courses come, he devours his in no time, and then reaches over and starts in on mine. Before I've had three bites, Clyde has eaten everything on my plate!

I don't order dessert anymore because Clyde gobbles his up and mine, too.

What kind of husband do you think he'd make? His hoggliness is not only disgusting and embarrassing, it leaves me... — HUNGRY

DEAR HUNGRY: Clyde's hoggliness isn't your only problem. An appalling lack of communication between two people who "love each other" is just as serious. What's wrong with telling Clyde how you feel about his eating habits? Do that, and then you'll know what kind of husband he'd make.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box 69700, Los Angeles, Ca. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

DAR in Bicentennial salute

A reception Saturday at 1:30 p.m. in the Bixby Hill home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Kussman, will honor Mrs. Frank R. Mattlach, California state Bicentennial chairman for Daughters of the American Revolution and a member of the national society steering committee.

Hosting the event will be the chapters comprising District 13 of DAR, headed by Bonnie Miller, district director.

Patriotic music will be provided by pianist Connie Lu Berg and soloist Betty Ramsell. Miss Liberty will greet guests at the door. A recording of the carillon in the bell tower at Valley Forge also will be played.

Patrick and Mary Hollis Freeman of Huntington Beach, representing the Children of the American Revolution, will give all in attendance a copy of "The Freedom Collection."

Among those welcoming guests will be Mrs. Kussman, Mrs. Leroy Conrad Kaump of Fullerton, past vice president general, and Mrs. William Reische of Los Alamitos, national vice chairman of the Western Region.

Reservations may be made with Mrs. G.C. Berg in Long Beach.

Style show aids hospital

A 200-year vintage fashion collection compiled by the Thrift Shop League of California Hospital Medical Center will debut for public inspection Wednesday during Founders' Day luncheon of Torrance Memorial Hospital Auxiliary.

The event is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. in Sam's Velvet Turtle Restaurant, Torrance.

Except for a reproduction of a Martha Washington dress and one other costume, every gown depicting an era in the country's history, plus accessories, is an original donated from private collections, according to Mrs. Evelyn Bigsby, chairwoman of the vintage committee.

Authentic wedding dresses date back to 1845. The collection includes gowns from the gay 90s, lavishly beaded dresses from the Roaring 20s, chiffon "barebacks" of the 30s, padded shoulders from the 40s.

Any organizations wishing to reserve the vintage collection for a show may contact the medical center Thrift Shop League, 1414 S. Hope St., Los Angeles. Fees will go to benefit the medical center operating fund.

CHARLES CUTSHAW
Flaming duck fit for the gods

QUITE OFTEN, I HAVE the highest praise in my columns for award-winning continental-American restaurants in Orange County and Los Angeles. They are superb establishments which deserve the honors they receive.

I am miffed, however, because Long Beach has a restaurant of award-winning caliber which doesn't receive any awards. It is Francois Manhattan, 1909 E. Fourth St., near Cherry Avenue. One of its continental creations is whole flaming duck for two persons, prepared on a cart at the guests' table. It is a dish fit for the gods. The sauce, made with liqueurs, herbs and love, is absolutely scrumptious — and the duck itself melts in your mouth.

Francois Manhattan hasn't received any awards for that wondrous creation, because it's an off-the-beaten-track restaurant. The Los Angeles restaurant writers have never visited it; thus it has never been nominated for an award. Prestigious dining and winning societies in the L.A. and Orange County areas haven't heard of the Manhattan either. Such societies often make recommendations which help restaurants receive recognition from regional or national organizations that make annual awards.

The Manhattan, which opened in the 1940s, is in one of Long Beach's older neighborhoods. It doesn't have a flashy modern decor. It's very good-looking, however, with designs that are American with old-world touches. Decade after decade, it has quietly built a reputation for excellence. It is well-known to Long Beach residents who appreciate fine dining and fine waiter and waitress service. It is also well-known to residents in many nearby cities. They love to drive to Long Beach to enjoy that flaming duck or perhaps the Manhattan's epicurean chateaubriand bouquette for two persons or the grenadine of beef for two persons. Those are extravaganzas which cost $17.95 — or more — for two persons. But the Manhattan also has superlative, multiple course table d'hotel dinners which start at $5.

The Manhattan's talented, versatile executive chef is Charles Cutshaw, an artist in the creation of gourmet sauces. The general manager is Pat Wise, a charming woman, liked by everyone. The maitre d' is Joe Shavitz, who's been there two decades and has friends who are city councilmen and school leaders as well as ordinary folk.

At luncheon, Tuesdays through Fridays, the Manhattan is unusually popular because it offers so many different hot and cold creations, ranging from simple but delicious sandwiches to more glamorous fare, such as baked oysters en shell, steamed clams or cracked crab or perhaps crab en crepes or the minute steak with bordelaise sauce. The Manhattan is closed Mondays.

SPEAKING OF off-the-beaten-track restaurants, here's a contradiction for you. One of Long Beach's most popular dining rooms and entertainment lounges is adjacent to the San Diego Freeway. It's seen by thousands of motorists daily. But most of them don't realize it's there.

It's the Mayan Room restaurant atop the Long Beach Holiday Inn. It's a dozen stories in the sky, so high above the beaten track it isn't easily apparent to all those drivers as they whiz by.

The Long Beach Holiday Inn, Lakewood Boulevard at Willow Street, is well-known, however, to seads of visitors from out of town who spend the night there or stay a week or more. They enjoy dining in the restaurant and listening to the sparkling entertainment of Mike Harris, who performs Tuesday through Saturday nights, and Ina LaGrange, who entertains Sunday and Monday nights. Each is an organist-vocalist with an original style and a fun personality.

The inn's Mayan Room is also well-known to numerous Long Beach residents who drop in regularly for dinner, cocktails and entertainment. They are lavish in their praise of the restaurant's new decor, which has a Mayan Indian theme. The colors are warm, cheerful and very bright, combining hot pinks, hot oranges, reds and blue. There are also replicas of Mayan art culture, such as stone faces and calendars.

Many Long Beach area residents enjoy visiting the Mayan Room with their friends for a leisurely Sunday morning breakfast. The restaurant has many huge windows presenting a sweeping view of the rooftops of Long Beach, its parks, trees and streets, laid out in even rectangles. Breakfast is served every day from 6 a.m. to noon. Such cocktails as Bloody Marys and Ramos Fizzes are served as well as eggs Benedict, with hollandaise sauce, $3.10, or a variety of other breakfasts.

Dinner is served Sundays from noon on. The Sunday specials range from family-style fried chicken, $3.50, to baked ham, $4.25; roast sirloin of beef, $3.95, and juicy, tender roast prime rib of beef, $8.50. Innkeeper John Dawson, who's from Montreal, and restaurant manager Ward Trobaugh, who's from Virginia, also offer entrees on their regular dinner menu which tie in with the Mayan theme. Among them are brochette of beef Picado, $5.50; seafood brochette Nescobar, $5.50, and broiled beef Azteca with an exotic, pungent sauce, $6.25.

New entrees on the regular menu, served every night, include breast of chicken Kiev, $5.50, an unusual dish prepared with butter; smoked pork chops, $5.50, and choice baby beef liver, $5.25. All come with crisp green salad, potatoes, vegetable of the day and basket of warm, fresh bread.

Many choose corps careers

Knight News Service

NEW YORK — Army nurses have come a long way since the Army Nurse Corps was first organized 75 years ago this month.

In its early days, during the civil war, coordinator Dorothea Lynde Dix is said to have ruled that all volunteers must be older than 30 and as homely as possible.

That was to combat the most dangerous enemy of professional nursing — marriage.

But the qualifications have changed radically. For one thing, you don't have to be female. The Army began to accept male nurses in 1955, and today it's estimated that 27 per cent of the 3,700 nurses in the corps are male. You also can be married, have children and still practice nursing in the Army.

According to Capt. Mary B. Kelly, Army Nurse Counselor and recruiter in Newark, N.J., men and women get the same assignments and the same pay.

Capt. Kelly points out, high salaries, coupled with other benefits, like early retirement at half pay and education opportunities has led to a higher retention rate.

"It used to be a lot of nurses left after they completed their two-year commission. But ever since Vietnam, the more attractive benefits have stimulated Army nurses to make a career of the corps. They also realize that many civilian hospitals aren't hiring right now, and we are," said Capt. Kelly.

Hildegard Knef scores as author

computerized from childhood to fight for life. Sometimes, with the bombs falling and my head bleeding and my jaw broken, I would stay alive just by concentrating on a new case of dysentery. At the blackest moments, when I've been close to death, there's too much anger in me to give up. The loss of a breast or a hip is nothing compared to the beauty of living.

She never set out to write a book about an actress. When she left "Silk Stockings" and her Hollywood film career behind, she decided to tell what it was like growing up under a dictatorship. "You had no chance as a child in Nazi Germany to work in the resistance or immigrate or anything, because you didn't even know what was going on around you. Then, by the time it is over, you are held responsible. Only then do you find out what really happened. I felt it was time somebody told the truth."

"The former Nazis are becoming biologically extinct, and the young generation in Germany doesn't even know what Hitler looked like. So I wrote 'The Gift Horse' to explain why I innocently fell in love with a Nazi and ended up in a Russian prison camp. And I was ready to accept the consequences."

"Only through the profession of acting was I catapulted into Hollywood, where I thought the war was over and everybody loved everybody. I found out nobody loves anybody, and the resentment against the Germans was so tremendous it made me absolutely speechless. I was put on ice and dragged out every time they needed a glamorous spy in a Darryl F. Zanuck movie. I went from a dictatorship to a dictatorship operetta."

No book has ever dissected Hollywood with the insight, brilliance or biting wit of "The Gift Horse." She prunes away the clutter the way the best gardeners select the ripest flowers for the vase. Yet she has an amazing command of sophisticated English.

"Nothing is harder than knowing what to leave in and what to leave out. Most people writing autobiographies just write what happened to them in their lives. That does not make a good book. I always try to write in the style of the girl I was at the time. As I matured, so did my vocabulary. I write in German, and my husband, David Palastanga, translates it into English. I write two hours a day and then file it away and forget it. I have the illusion nobody will ever read what I am writing. Otherwise, I would not be able to write my own name."

SHE HATES HOLLYWOOD movies about Nazis, she says, because "they are always shown as blubbery idiots, but they were there for 12 years and they were not clowns, and they brought the greatest horror the world has ever known and changed all our lives for generations to come, and I get absolutely furious when I see them treated like Keystone Kops because they were much too dangerous." She has just completed her first film in nine years about the German resistance.

"I said I'd never make another film. At a certain age you must face the fact that films are an idiotic profession and you can't be held responsible for the work of others. A film is made by the author, the producer, the director, the camera and the cutter. But in the end, it's the actor who gets the blame. So I got fed up."

"Now I break my 'never again' rule because this is the most honest, intelligent script I've read in years. I play a poor woman whose son was shot in the first days of the war. She wrote postcards saying, 'Hitler killed my son!' and 'We are following the Führer like a herd of sheep to the slaughterhouse!' and planted them all over Berlin. The Gestapo went insane. She succeeded to baffle them for a year before they caught her. It's called 'Everyone Dies Alone,' and it's a true story — the first indication in years that the German film industry might be surfacing again."

She has "a criminal memory" for all that has happened to her. Also a deep, throaty laugh that moves sexily from her porcelain neck downward until it hugs her toes. She's so shrewd that she cuts through facades like a laser. She doesn't suffer fools easily, yet she's not tough. "I'm a goulash of emotions. I have a great capacity for friendship and laughter. But I'm terrified of stupidity because it's the stupid ones who are the most dangerous. My private life is chaos, but my work is very disciplined. I am totally unable to handle money. My finances are always in a muddle."

"I could probably have been a big American film star after 'Silk Stockings,' but I detest playing the silly games that go on in Hollywood. If you go to this party, maybe you'll get the part. I hate the bickering with agents and the asininity of being a star."

"Yet I don't regret the decisions I've made. I don't censor my life. The things we do are there, they change us and it's these changes which make us what we are in the end, good or bad. I have paid a high price for my survival, but survival breeds optimism. Right now, I am more optimistic than ever. For years I went around being somebody else. They changed my name to Hildegard Neff. I was an onlooker in the wrong vicinity. Now I am my real self again — Hildegard Knef, pronounced with a K. I know who I am, and the climate looks good."

It's not just the survival that makes her remarkable. It's the way she survived and what it can teach us about ourselves that makes her books and performances such rewarding experiences. We should be grateful that she cared. It's a better world when Knef is in it.

Aces on bridge

Dear Mr. Korn: What is meant by bad points or good points? We missed a slam and my partner alibied that her points were bad ones.

Bad News Sacramento

Answer: Good and bad points refer to the type of high cards held as compared to what has been promised by prior bidding.

For example, if partner were interested in slam after your opening one no trump, you would much prefer to cooperate if your points were in aces and kings rather than queens and jacks. A bad 16 points also may refer to the lack of distribution or intermediate card values.

Listen to this one from the ACBL Bulletin:

"Did you hear about the player who, holding 29 high card points, got only to six no trump after getting a positive response from partner? His reason: it was a bad 29 points."

Dear Mr. Korn:

We had this unusual bidding and everyone is wondering who is right. Some say West's second double is for penalties. Others say it's for takeout. Can you clarify?

South	West	North	East
1♣	2♦	3♥	4♠
Pass	1♠	Pass	Pass
2♥	2♣

Disaster Area, New Orleans

Answer: Theoretically this is a penalty double. However, I would interpret the double as a desire to compete further since it is very unlikely that West thinks he can beat two hearts (if he can, he probably should pass and be satisfied with a plus).

However, as you obviously have experienced, I would be ever careful in doubles of this sort without a definite agreement beforehand. Your letter adds an exclamation point to my caution sign.

Dear Mr. Korn: The dinner bell breaks up the women's day rubber. How is the score computed?

Ding Dong, Newark

Answer: If only one game is completed, the winners of that game get 300 points. If only one side has a part score in a game not completed, that side gets 50 points. The trick and premium points of each side are added and the side with the greater number wins the difference in totals.

Dear Mr. Korn: Does the double of an opening three bid force partner to bid?

Doubled Game, Dayton

Answer: The double is generally played as a takeout double. Responder should bid unless he thinks defending the doubled contract is best for his side. With very good trumps and no game visions he can convert the double and pass for penalties.

The economy in brief(s)

Knight News Service

America's men and women are facing an underwear-price crisis that's no laughing matter, says a Philadelphia clothing merchant who keeps an eye on such things.

For the first time since the Depression, Sam Bortnick of Bortnick's Department Store, is opening packages of men's underwear and selling single pairs of Fruit of the Loom shorts.

And Sam thinks the price of underwear is a better barometer of the times than all the economic theories in the world.

Dinner-dance planned by police wives

Valentine's dinner-dance sponsored by the Los Alamitos Police Wives Association is planned Saturday at the Golden Sails Inn.

Tickets are $11 per person and may be obtained from the Police Department, 3201 Katella Ave., Los Alamitos. Grand prize will be a trip for two to Las Vegas.

Proceeds from the event will support community activities and services.

Three years ago, Sam reports, he could sell a package of three pairs of men's shorts for $2.05. Then last year they went to $3.89, and he's just been notified of a wholesale price increase that means he'll have to sell three pairs for $4.59.

And they're pretty flimsy shorts, he adds.

Sam recently alerted the nation's women to a "Snuggles crisis"

(Snuggles, for uninitiates, are knee-length cotton-knit garments that some women have been wearing for years. When snuggles went from $1 to $2.50 or more, Sam decided he wouldn't even stock them.

"Women are saying, 'this is outrageous,' and I don't blame them. I'd rather not even stock the things."

SAM, WHO looks upon himself as a kind of early-warning system on the price of unmentionables, says: "How can you ask a man for $1.60 or so for a pair of shorts so flimsy that a gust of wind would make a hole in them?"

"Like I keep saying,

Women are asking...

They say anything goes in fashion. What is 'with-it' for blouses and shirts?

By REBA & BONNIE CHURCHILL

Eye-catching is the word for shirts, sweaters and toppers that dazzle the eyes with multi-patterns and colors! Today, the order of fashion is mix-match-then-mix-again.

Probably grandma would shudder if you suggested wearing strips, circles, silks, knits, ribbons and bows — all in one topper set. But, as Kathy Crain illustrates, it can be done — and nicely, too. The full-sleeved, tailored blouse is a riot of compass circles, accented with striped collar and cuffs. A soft knit pull-over supplies the all girl touch with ribbons threaded diagonally across the torso and bows lining the hi-length hem.

If you'd prefer something more "clotheshorse cowboy," check the western style shirt-jackets that are riding herd on fashion. They draw attention, too, since they are in sunset orange, barbecue red and smokehouse purple.

Don't let the names of the colors fool you — they just mean they are bright-bright colors. They are "tamed" with contrasting stitching around collar and cuffs, across the shoulders, down the torso and accenting the snap-button front and hemline.

Naturally, the stylish buckaroo has zipper pockets that slash on a slant just below the waist. So, when you're shopping for shirts, remember, today bold and bright are right.

AT WIT'S END

Grows more beautiful with each passing year

According to her height and weight on the insurance charts, she should be a guard for the Lakers. She has iron-starved blood, one shoulder is lower than the other, and she bites her fingernails.

She is the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. She should be. She's worked on that body and face for more than 60 years. The process for that kind of beauty can't be rushed.

The wrinkles in the face have been earned...one at a time. The stubborn one around the lips that has deepened with every "No!" The thin ones on the forehead that mysteriously appeared when the first child was born.

The eyes are protected by glass now, but you can still see the perma-crinkles around them. Young eyes are darting and fleeting. These are mature eyes that reflect a lifetime. Eyes that have glistened with pride, filled with tears of sorrow, snapped in anger, and burned from loss of sleep. They are now direct and penetrating and look at you when you speak.

erma bombeck

THE BULGES are classics. They developed slowly from babies too sleepy to walk who had to be carried home from Grandma's, grocery bags lugged from the car, ashes carried out of the basement while her husband was at war. Now, they are fed by a minimum of activity, a full refrigerator, and TV benders.

The extra chin is custom-grown and takes years to perfect. Sometimes you can only see it from the side but it's there. Pampered women don't have an extra chin. They cream them away or pat the muscles until they become firm. But this chin has always been there, supporting a nodding head that slept in a chair all night...bent over knitting...praying.

The legs are still shapely, but the step is slower. They ran too often for the bus, stood a little too long when she "clerked" in the department store, got beat up while teaching her daughter how to ride a two-wheeler. They're purple at the back of the knees.

THE HANDS? They're small and veined and have been dunked, dipped, shook, patted, wrung, caught in doors, splintered, dyed, bitten and blistered, but you can't help but be impressed when you see the ring finger that has shrunk from years of wearing the same wedding ring. It takes time — and much more — to diminish a finger.

I looked at mother long and hard the other day and said, "Mom, I have never seen you so beautiful." "I work at it," she snapped.

CHEF OF THE WEEK

Civic pride cues entry into politics

This interview was so rewarding and enlightening, we hardly know where to begin. To say that today's chef of the week is with "such and such a company" would be an oversimplification.

James H. Wilson has been councilman of the Long Beach 6th District since April 7, 1970, and was re-elected, and also selected as vice mayor in 1975.

mildred flanary

Professionally, Wilson is urban affairs specialist at General Data Company, Santa Monica. He says, "My dream for Long Beach is full employment, freedom from crime and decent housing."

Born in Temple, Tex., his family moved to California during World War II. He has been a resident of Long Beach 27 years.

Wilson attended Hamilton Junior and Polytechnic High Schools; Long Beach Evening High School and Long Beach City College, graduating from LBSU with a major in sociology. He also has a certificate of completion, City of Long Beach Supervisory Development.

In his role as Councilman, Wilson has planned, coordinated and developed workshops, seminars, and laboratories for community-based program staffs. He assisted industry in formulating manpower administration programs for the disadvantaged communities.

INTER-ACTION workshops between supervisors in industry and potential hard core employees, have also been part of Wilson's program as has the conducting of workshops around programs dealing with Title I, and Title VII programs.

Even before becoming councilman, Wilson was active in Long Beach projects. From 1951 to 1956, he served as preparator for the Long Beach Museum of Art; and in 1968-69, he served as project director of Long Beach Commission on Economic Opportunity Project Action and Community Teamwork known as PACT.

Wilson has to his credit organization of the Long Beach Peoples Credit Union. He is chairman of the voter registration drive in the Central Area; serves on the board of directors of both the Community Welfare Council, and the Community Coordinating Council, and is a member of the Mayor's Task Force on Housing in Long Beach.

FASCINATING FABRICS

Leno—great new revival

A recent fashion photo and caption proclaimed: "Leno of polyester and cotton is a natural for this long dress. The stand-up collar, long full sleeves and tie belt, combined with the delicate surface texture of the fabric, are important directions for spring, '76." Frequent reference to "leno" appears in other fashion forecasts bracketed with allusion to sheer, feminine fabric.

What is leno? It's an open-weave fabric somewhat akin to gauze, but with more durability and frances dietrich

sophistication than the peasantry look of the latter. In weaving leno, the lengthwise yarns on the loom work in pairs; one above the other. When the crosswise yarn is shot over and under the two, a twist occurs. The twist locks the yarn in place.

This tricky method produces a lightweight fabric with strength, resistance to slippage or distortion and a distinctive lacy-look in a soft-to-crisp texture. The airiness of the weave ranges from marquisette to dress and shirt fabric.

The weaving method requires strong yarn. Originally made from linen thread, its name derived from "linon," French for flax. The first styling was quite open and the obvious diamond pattern of the interlocking yarn resulted in the nickname of marquisette, after the marquis diamond.

WHEN SELECTING a pattern for leno fabric, avoid one with detailed seams, set-in pockets or a slim tailored look or the tube. Look for simple lines, the least number of seams and darts, easy, full styling that can be belted. Leno has a special illusive character. Pattern styling should make the most of it.

Sheer leno fabric provides an exciting effect when underlined with fabric of contrasting color. Cut underlining from the same pattern pieces as the garment. Stitch the underlining into the seam with the fashion fabric. Seam edges may be trimmed straight, pinked or overcast lightly.

When using collars and cuffs, trim the seam allowance to hairline width. To finish a plain neckline, use bias binding rather than a shaped facing. Buttons and buttonloops are preferable to buttonholes or zippers.

Do not cut leno or any sheer fabric on a polished surface, carpet or floor. In the absence of a felt surface, pin sheeting tightly over the cutting board or table.

Baste seams and darts by hand, rather than using machine basting as soft, sheer fabric may pucker. Today's leno fabric is usually a blend of polyester and cotton, which may be stitched with a combination polyester and cotton thread of fine dimension.

Sewing machine adjustment will depend on the specific fabric, which may range from obviously open weave to tighter structure. Here are some general guidelines: Tension may need to be reduced. Pressure should be average to light. Stitch length appropriate for sheer fabric is 15 to 20 stitches per inch. Machine needle required is size No. 9 or 10. Test stitching for any new construction technique on a double scrap of fabric.

DESIGNER PATTERN

Easy to sew, easier to wear

Few seams, no tricky details to sew and the result is the most romantic, graceful dress you could possibly choose this spring. Dominic Rompollo designed this success of the fashion season to look and be effortless in all ways. The attached poncho is all one flat piece. It floats over a dress that's caught at the waist by a drawstring through a casing (easiest fitting ever). You'll enjoy the feeling of movement in Printed Pattern M253 — it makes every gesture memorable. The original is silky crepe banded with satin ribbon. Consider also sheer cotton.

Printed Pattern M253 is available in misses' sizes 8, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18. Size 12 (bust 34) requires 3 1/2 yards of 45-inch fabric.

Please send $1.25 for Printed Pattern M253 to Independent Press Telegram, Pattern Department, P.O. Box 59, Old Chelsea Station, New York, N.Y., 10011. (Add 25 cents for first class mail and special handling). Print plainly YOUR NAME, ADDRESS with ZIP, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

COUNCILMAN JAMES H. WILSON

He served for 10 years as a trainer for Western Community Action Training, Inc.

He and his wife, Audrey, have a daughter, Cynthia, and a son, Ronald. Audrey says, "He enjoys presiding over the barbecue, and is an avid watcher of TV sports events. But most of his time is taken up with activities at the Neighborhood Facility Center, where he maintains office hours from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. each Saturday." Wilson adds, "Anyone can feel free to drop in during my Saturday hours."

His recipe today is for Chicken in the Pot. From the expression on his face, he's going to enjoy it!

CHICKEN IN THE POT

- 1/4 cup cooking oil
- 2 broilers or frying chickens, quartered
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1 teaspoon black pepper
- 1/2 cup flour
- 1 cup coarsely chopped onions
- 1/2 teaspoon powdered saffron
- 2 chicken bouillon cubes
- 6 cups boiling water
- 2 cups long grain rice
- 1 10-ounce package frozen peas, thawed

Heat oil in Dutch oven, wash chicken and pat dry...combine salt, pepper and flour and sprinkle over chicken on both sides. To begin, place 4 pieces in hot oil to brown lightly on both sides. Remove from oil, brown remaining chicken pieces, then set aside. Pour onions into oil and saute for five minutes, stir in saffron, bouillon cubes and boiling water. Add browned chicken and bring liquid to a boil. Cover and simmer for 45 minutes. Stir in rice and cover to simmer for an additional 15 minutes. Add thawed peas, cover and continue to simmer until peas are done. Serves 6.

ADVICE TO THE TAXLORN

Inherits own money

DEAR MR. SMITH: My father died in London in January of 1975. He was holding some shares in his name and money I was forced to leave behind when I left Vienna in 1938. I now have received some of this money from England. Does the bank I do business with in this country report monies received from England to the IRS? What taxes (and what kind) if any, do I owe to the IRS on these remittances? The money (nearly 80 per cent) was mine to begin with, only I couldn't take it out of Austria, whereas my father could. Inheritance taxes were paid on my father's estate in England. — W.O.

I believe that you should report on your 1975 Form 1040, only that part of the remit-only at redemption), you report as interest income the total increase in value, starting with the date of the gift.

On your federal returns for 1975 and later years you have two choices: 1) Report as interest income, the increase in value each year, or 2) wait until you redeem the bonds.

Interest from U.S. Bonds is exempt only from state income tax — not from federal income tax. Do not confuse this with state and municipal bond interest.

DEAR MR. SMITH: I am a retired judge who on occasion assists on vacations or overflow. For this I waive any salary but I do receive a per diem allowance of $30 plus mileage. Is this per diem allowance to be reported as gross income and taxable? The IRS tax information service says yes. An instructor in a federal income tax law school course says no. Commerce Clearing House (2296.1426) states an accounting is deemed to have been made if the employees per diem allowance does not exceed $44. See TIR No. 1299, 8/27/74. — J.W.

The references you cite do not appear to apply to commuting mileage, or for meals, unless traveling away from home. I do not believe that a per diem or mileage arrangement will automatically make deductible those expenses which are personal. I believe you should report the allowances as income, and deduct your actual deductible expenses.

DEAR MR. SMITH: We have paid all sorts of legal expenses to settle matters between my husband and his former wife, including support for his children. Are any of these deductible? What about payments made to his ex-wife? — R.D.

Generally, legal fees and expenses paid to obtain a divorce will be non-deductible. By going to court some taxpayers have won the right to deduct legal fees for tax advice on the consequences of divorce. Also, wives have won, in court, the right to deduct legal fees related to obtaining alimony.

Payments to the ex-wife pursuant to court order for support, are deductible as alimony unless the payments are made for the support of the children. If payments for children exceed 50 of their total support, the children may be claimed as dependents. Other non-periodic payments are not deductible.

tances that represent taxable income items, such as interest and dividends actually earned or received after the date of your father's death.

Since you can substantiate that the funds came from your father's estate, I'd not be concerned about any reports your bank may be required to furnish to the IRS.

DEAR MR. SMITH: I am the owner of 500 shares of stock, and the company has gone bankrupt. What is the best way to use this loss on my income tax? — G.L.

Report the loss on Schedule D, Form 1040, as if you had sold your shares on December 31, 1975, at a price of zero.

DEAR MR. SMITH: Recently my wife and I were given five Series E government bonds by her father. Two of these have been matured 15 years, one about 10 years, and the other two have about three years to go. In computing the income tax on these, does one use the value of the bonds when we received them, or the actual cost when they were bought. I have also heard that interest from government bonds was not taxable. Is that true? — L.M.

RIGHT ON TARGET

Medieval Nordlingen

By HERB SHANNON
I.P.T. Travel Editor

NORDLINGEN, Germany - It's impossible to miss this medieval walled city from the window seat of a passing Lufthansa German Airlines jet. Two nearly perfect concentric circles formed by its present outer fortifications and the remains of an earlier defense ring outgrown in the 14th century are surrounded by acres of tilled fields radiating to the rim of distant hills like the spokes of a gigantic dartboard.

In spite of the irresistible target it presents, Nordlingen suffered little from aerial bombing during World War II. The ravages of time and accident have caused more grievous harm. A fire in recent years severely damaged the 300-foot spire of St. George's church, standing at the bullseye of the city in a mirror image of the sharp central peak of a crater on the moon.

Nordlingen is in fact located at almost the exact center of the Reis, one of the world's largest meteorite craters. The enormous dent was created some 15 million years ago by a visitor from outer space. Water accumulated for eons after the cataclysmic collision, making a circular lake more than 10 miles across. The reservoir eventually eroded an outlet southward to the Danube, leaving a vast bowl of fertile soil which is now the breadbasket of Bavaria.

AMERICAN SCIENTISTS determined the cause of the landscape feature in 1960. Ten years later, quarries first dug by Roman rulers for regional building projects were used as geological training grounds by Apollo astronauts preparing for lunar exploration missions.

Souvenirs of the successful U.S. conquest of space, including a rock from the moon almost identical in composition to the Nordlingen meteorite residue, are on display in the city's science museum. Other exhibits detail the history of the area from the crash landing of the asteroid to its cultural beginnings as a Roman trade settlement and emergence as a free city of Germany in 1215.

Architectural restoration duplicates the city's function as well as form as one of the main centers along Germany's Romantic Road in the Middle Ages. Structures rebuilt within the walls of Nordlingen must conform to the original in use and appearance. Dwellings and business places remain as such.

The reconstruction of 400-year-old St. George's church includes priceless art objects. A world-famed mural destroyed by the fire is being reproduced from color photographs. Carved altars which had been replaced by later models have been brought out of storage to serve again.

COMPRESSION OF the city's living quarters by the encircling walls did not end with the expansion of boundaries 500 years ago. The larger squares of the original town center dwindle to narrow lanes and tiny courtyards in the outer circle. Nordlingen's population of 9,000 in 1939 was swelled 50 per cent by an influx from East Germany in 1945, and has reached its maximum of 15,000 today.

Some light industry has been established outside the perimeters of the connecting 13 towers and five gateways of the city. The railway station is also outside the ring in one of the suburbs which add about 2,000 to the population. Among the new factories are two electronic plants of California aerospace firms.

More evidence of Nordlingen's re-entry into the space age is found in the Sonne Hotel, a family-owned inn since 1401 in the shadow of St. George's steeple. A plaque depicting the launch of an Apollo spacecraft to the moon is displayed prominently on the first landing of the creaky main staircase to rooms above.

Taped to the counter of the lobby cubicle where Frau Friedl Truedinger runs a small switchboard, the cashier's cage, a lounge bar, an excellent restaurant and a staff of 12 busy employees is a photograph taken in the bar on Aug. 14, 1970. The photo is autographed by the subjects, Alan Shepard, Eugene Cernan, Ed Mitchell and Joseph Engle.

The astronauts of the Apollo 14 team are toasting Frau Truedinger with her own house secret, the Maximilian cocktail. A large stemmed glass rimmed with lemon and sugar, it contains champagne and several other ingredients which the proprietor steadfastly refuses to identify.

Try it. You may like it. It could be rocket fuel.

NARROW cobble street is typical of Nordlingen's outer circle of dwellings compressed by the defense walls and fortified towers surrounding the city.

Cozumel—relaxation, romance

While the sinking sun throws gold over the Caribbean and the inky surf laps against white sand, I am enjoying a drink on my own private patio at the El Presidente Hotel in Cozumel.

It has been another blissful day and I am wonderfully tired in the relaxed sort of way you get after hours of beachcombing, snorkeling and roasting in the sun.

This superb Mexican resort, located on an island just east of the Yucatan peninsula, has everything that its brochures promise. There are long, white coral beaches, lavaframed tide pools filled with tropical snails and clear, clean water layered in stripes of blue, green and purple that is more intense than any water color I have ever seen. Its beauty is splendid, but even more, its beaches are not yet overrun with the transistor-carrying crowds.

THE NAME Cozumel is Mayan, meaning "place of the swallows," and they, along with uncountable other species, still stop to rest on their migratory while the hibiscus folded up for the night and fireflies started to light the sky.

The el Presidente Hotel is on the American plan, as most of them here are, and in the dining room it seemed that everyone knew someone except me. The next morning I took a Robinson Crusoe cruise, though, and all that changed.

This cruise, which costs $10 and includes lunch, is taken on a motor launch that leaves the hotel dock each morning, destination unknown. You might wind up at San Francisco Beach around the island, at the Isle of Passion off Cozumel's northern tip, or wherever else the boatswain decides to go.

EN ROUTE, while you visit with other passengers and refresh yourselves with good Mexican beer from the ice chest, Scuba divers go overboard to spear fish that they later cook on the beach for your lunch.

By the time you pull into shore, everyone is well-acquainted. Then, while the crew bakes the fish, chills the wine and mixes a salad, the rest of you collect turban shells, coax coati out of the jungle, swim or explore the endless coves and beaches.

We were lucky because our cruise went to San Francisco beach where there is a little grasstreks from Florida to Cuba. Fish, too, are abundant, with turtles, lobster and assorted game fish crowding the waters.

Before modern civilization came to Cozumel, Yucatan natives afflicted with lung infections were sent here to recover. One of Cortes' Spanish conquistadores noted in 1526 that it was on Cozumel that he first saw the hammock, or hammock, which then was used to transport sick people who came here to get cured.

In spite of the island's humidity, Mexican doctors still send patients here because of the healthful climate. It is said that after spending three days, you will experience a healthy effect even if you aren't sick. After three days I feel too good to leave, so maybe it's true.

The only drawback to this idyllic place, if it can be considered as such, is that it is too romantic. On the first evening I felt very lonely on my patio

Irish cottage holiday with a difference

County Clare, Ireland

At a glance, these Irish cottages look like all others in the village: Thatched roof. Whitewashed walls. A painted half door. Inside there's a walk-in peat fireplace. But —

These are built for rent to tourists. So the floor flagstones are underlaid with radiant heating. Electric radiators in the walls. And there's an all-electric kitchen.

Write Irish-Rent-A-Cottage, Shannon Airport, Ireland. Or Irish Tourist Board, 510 W. Sixth St., Los Angeles 90014.

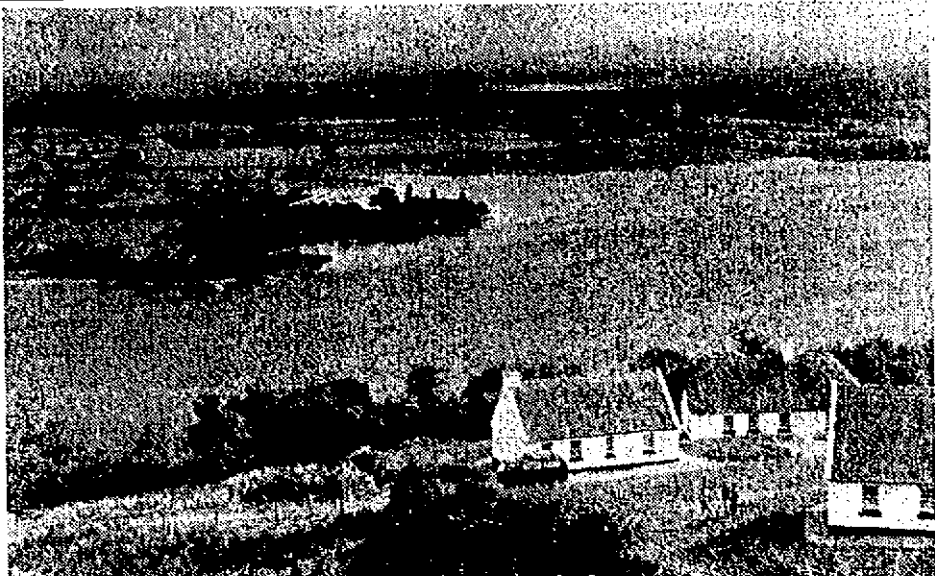

stan delaplane

I TOOK ONE of these cottages for a couple of weeks. Small village. One pub-grocery. Small river flowing into Galway Bay.

Eleven are now being built for sale in Connemara. Price around $30,000 leasehold for 999 years.

Financing seems to be impossible in Ireland. However, if you're an artist, a writer or a musician, Ireland doesn't tax you. God bless the Irish, says I.

The Irish Tourist Board and the British Tourist Authority, 612 S. Flower St., Los Angeles, 90017, also have lists of Farmhouse Accommodations. Great summer vacation if you have children. Reasonable.

(With the pound and dollar scooting up and down, plus inflation, I can't get into print with firm figures.)

IF YOU'RE STOCKING a few daydreams of life abroad, England is loaded with antique homes for sale: "Redundant church . . ." is one listing. Another, "The building dates back to Elizabethan times when it was used as a jail."

Historic houses qualify if they were built before 1800. Which may mean the plumbing is chancy. But nearly all have gardens — ground space was cheaper in those jolly days.

It looks like Kaanapali beach on the island of Maui will be wall-to-wall condominiums. Many built. Many building. Price of $80,000 seems average.

Plenty to rent. Both United and Western Airlines have fly-and-rent plans and will send you a brochure. Prices are reasonable.

Baja Airlines to add route

Baja Airlines, the nation's only international commuter airline, will expand services starting March 18 with two flights weekly from Long Beach to La Paz, capital of Baja California South, and other resorts on the Cabo San Lucas tip of the Mexican peninsula.

With headquarters at 4100 Donald Douglas Dr., Long Beach Airport, Baja Airlines now flies regularly scheduled flights to 15 destinations in Baja California and the State of Sonora on the northern Mexican mainland.

Flights to La Paz will depart Long Beach at 7:30 a.m. Thursdays and Sundays, with a stop at San Diego at 8 a.m. No change of plane will be necessary. Round trip fares will be $200 to La Paz and $220 to Cabo San Lucas.

Destinations in the Cabo area will be Punta Pescadero, Rancho Buena Vista, Punta Colorado, Hotel Palmia and Hotel Cabo San Lucas.

Return flights will leave Cabo San Lucas at 9:40 a.m. Fridays and Sundays. Passengers will be picked up at the individual hotel airstrips in the Cabo area and leave La Paz at 12:01 p.m. for arrival in San Diego at 5 p.m. and Long Beach at 6 p.m.

The airline, which flies Volper D18S Trigear aircraft on its routes, will offer package vacations with the Los Arcos and El Presidente hotels in La Paz and the Punta Pescadero, Rancho Buena Vista, Punta Colorado, Cabo San Lucas, Solmar and Finisterre resort hotels in the Cabo San Lucas area.

"We will be in Japan (my husband on business) and would like to know of any customs we should observe to make the best impression."

Wear slip-on-and-off shoes. You'll be in and out of them a lot. They come off in entering Japanese homes, hotels and restaurants. There'll be slippers to put on.

Now — you wear slippers on hardwood floors. But — going into a room with tatami — straw matting — you take off the slippers and leave them at the door.

Japanese bow — some will shake hands but probably wish they didn't have to. Hand-to-hand touch is unpleasant for all people in the Far East.

If you are the host in a restaurant, seat your guest of honor with his back to the little alcove with the hanging scroll and the flower arrangement.

JAPANESE BUSINESSMEN exchange cards with every bow. Tell the airline to have some printed in Japanese and waiting for you — if you're being met you'll start using them right away. I know PanAm and CP Air will do this. I imagine other lines do it too.

They laughed when I asked for a hotel room for under $25.

In February in San Juan? No way! said four out of the five travel agents I tried. The fifth probably had had hospital training and treated me more gently.

"You wouldn't like them, dear," she said in the tone of someone who has lived and learned.

Maybe so, I thought. But that was my top limit and it seemed a fair figure. So I kept dialing.

ABOUT 10 MINUTES later I hit paydirt in the form of an Eastern Airlines reservations clerk. The very mention of San Juan obviously pushed her happy memories button, and we were the best of phone friends in no time.

"Oh, I never pay more than $12," she said. "But of course we get discounts. If I were you, I'd go to the Excelsior. It's a little out of the way, but there's good bus service, the place is really clean, there's a pool and a terrific coffee shop with a Weight-Watchers' menu."

Cruise South to carnival

The all-first-class S.S. Universe Campus of Orient Overseas Line will make her inaugural cruise from her new home port of Los Angeles on Feb. 28th, with the nine-day "Carnival in Mazatlan" cruise also visiting Puerto Vallarta and Cabo San Lucas along the Mexican Riviera.

The newly-refurbished 625-passenger cruise liner features the lowest rates of any West Coast cruise line. Fares for the inaugural cruise range from $390 to $700, which amounts to as little as $40 a day.

The cruise will depart Los Angeles at noon, Saturday, Feb. 28, and arrive back in Los Angeles at 9 a.m. Sunday, March 7, which means five workdays at sea — an ideal time period for passengers taking one-week vacations.

Similarly, to permit passengers the greatest amount of time to view and participate in the colorful "Carnival" festivities in Mazatlan on March 2, the Universe will stay in port until 10 p.m.

MAZATLAN is also justly famed for its intriguing Malecon or waterfront area and alluring beaches. Cobblestoned streets and Gringo Gulch compose just two attractions of Puerto Vallarta, long one of the world's more renowned romantic settings. Southernmost point of Baja California, Cabo San Lucas is a blend of modern resorts coupled with charming Mission-style architecture. There are also such natural attractions as jagged, water-sculptured pinnacles and boat rides which reveal iridescent tropical fish cavorting in submarine canyons.

Low-cost shore excursions are available in each port of call.

The Universe will sail on a series of four to 12-day cruises to the Mexican Riviera throughout 1976, the only West Coast line scheduled to sail all year to ports from Acapulco to Ensenada. Additional information on these cruises may be obtained from travel agents or from Orient Overseas Line, 9060 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, Ca. 90211.

Guadeloupe

The French island of Guadeloupe is rapidly becoming a prime Caribbean tourist target. This season will see the inauguration of Air France wide-cabin Airbus service from New York and the opening of more than 1,000 new luxury beachfront hotel rooms.

The all first class Royal Viking Sea departs Los Angeles, June 14 for a 14-day round-trip Canada/Alaska cruise vacation sponsored by Long Beach area travel agents and the Independent Press-Telegram. IP-T readers will sail to Victoria, Vancouver and Prince Rupert, British Columbia, Canada. Alaskan ports-of-call include Juneau, Sitka, Haines and spectacular Glacier Bay. Reservations can be arranged through local participating travel agents and more details will appear in the Sunday travel pages of your Independent Press-Telegram.

"There's even a beauty shop in the basement. Oh yes, there's also a TV in your room and a coffeemaker and they bring you free ice and a newspaper every day. And you have a little balcony to sit on if you want to sun alone or just have a drink and read."

It seemed perfectly clear that the Excelsior and I were meant for each other. And so we were — at $22 a night.

That was two years ago; the Excelsior still lives (but with winter singles now $25 to $38), and my only regret is that I didn't get the airline person's name. When it comes to spotting and evaluating budget accommodations in the Caribbean, there's a hole bigger than the Grand Canyon.

IT IS, YOU'LL notice, remarkably easy to get information about high-price places. But it's almost worth your life to get the same detailed news about the "bargains," much less learn that there are some.

After studying the problem at length, I think the only way to find a winner among lower-price Caribbean lodgings is to get lucky. Fortunately, it is possible to help your luck along.

The first move is to avoid getting stuck on the wrong island. There is no sense in paying a premium for a nice quiet piece of "paradise" when what you care about is action, or having your heart set on white sand beaches and getting gravel instead.

By all means, get all the hotel information you can before you go. The tourist offices have lists, but be sure to ask for hotels and guesthouses; guesthouses sometimes are overlooked because, after all, you did say "hotels." Guesthouses, however, can be pretty grand.

They're going back to the 'sticks'

By JULES LOH

HARRISON, Ark. (AP) — Americans since Thomas Jefferson have generally scorned and mistrusted their big cities. Now, apparently, they're doing something about it. They're leaving them.

A mid-decade federal study shows that the long migration from the country to the city not only has halted — a fact noted for the first time in this century in the 1970 census — but that the historic reversal has speeded up.

During the past five years the nation's metropolitan counties, those with a city of at least 50,000 people, grew less than 3 per cent in population while non-metropolitan counties gained more than 4 per cent.

What that means is that, contrary to the dry pattern of the countryside in the years since World War II, not all small towns are dying. Not even, necessarily, the ones off the beaten path, those the four-lane missed. That bit of bad luck was once taken as an unfailing augury of doom. No longer.

"I read the job applications," said Howard McColley, one of this rural area's larger industrial employers. "They come from all over, but what's more important is that people born here who had moved away are coming back."

The question the bare census figures don't answer is why. This little town in northwest Arkansas would seem a good place to try to find out.

Harrison, home of 8,876 souls, is the largest town within an 80-mile radius spanning eight counties in the Arkansas-Missouri Ozarks, the hill country celebrated in legend, lore and Li'l Abner as one of the backwoodsiest places in the land.

The town is served by no railroad, reached by no Interstate highway, watered by no stream capable of floating anything larger than a canoe. Which is to say, Harrison benefits from none of the time-honored Chamber of Commerce formulas for growth. That being so, during the 1940s and '50s folks fled these mountains in droves.

But during the past five years, Harrison's population has leapt no less than 22 per cent. Industrial development has doubled. Land prices in some parts of the area have soared 1,000 per cent.

"I'd be afraid to put any price on a piece of land unless I really wanted to sell it," said Richard Hudson, whose own recent history reflects that of Harrison's.

Hudson took a degree in agriculture in 1954 at the state university figuring to come home and work the family's 70 acres in Crooked Creek Valley. He did, but also got into real estate nine years later to help ends meet during a drought. Today blue-ribbed herefords graze on his 450 acres, and he owns an assortment of downtown buildings plus a motel where the restaurant serves sowbelly and biscuits that melt in your mouth.

"When I put my first broker's ad in the Harrison Times in 1963 there were four of us," Hudson said. "Five years ago there were about 70. Today there are more than 150 licensed brokers listed. That about tells what's been going on in Harrison and Boone County."

What's been going on is the more important because this new, or rediscovered, allure of Our Town appears to be part of a massive nationwide population shift away from the industrialized North and toward the South and West. It is bound to have political effect when Congress is reapportioned after the 1980 census.

Since the 1970 census the nation has gained 10 million in population (to 213,121,000). The between-census study shows that 85 per cent of that growth was in 29 southern and western states. The only northern states to gain more than the national average of 4.8 per cent were Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, all largely rural.

In some areas the change has been as profound, if not as dramatic, as in northwest Arkansas. West Virginians, for instance, used to sing a mountain ballad about what the three Rs meant to kids in that state: "Reading, 'Riting and the Road to Columbus." But in the past five years the southern Appalachian coal fields stopped losing people and gained 6.3 per cent — about the same percentage New York State lost.

Similar gains were recorded in rural counties of the Rockies and the upper Great Lakes.

Many would concede that life in a small town, if not as intellectually stimulating or as conducive to striking it rich as life in a big city, has always seemed saner. Surely rising urban crime rates, high taxes and other living costs account in some measure for today's drift back to the countryside.

But those obvious differences have been true, more or less, for years. Yet not since 1920, the year the nation's urban population outstripped the rural, have a majority of Americans found such homespun attractions as 4-H Club socials, quilling bees and Second Sunday Singings equal to the city's lure of romance and challenge. Why now?

"The times they are a-changing," said Bill Baker. "This generation of homemakers are the ones who sang that back in the Sixties. They aren't wealth-oriented. They don't define success the way earlier generations did."

know. He was in graduate school during the Sixties and now has come back to his beloved Ozarks to be president — and head cheerleader — of North Arkansas Community College.

The college serves seven counties and Baker periodically jostles his car over rugged mountain roads, some hardly more than trails, to talk personally to high school seniors in the outlying villages: Mt. Judea, Snowball, Eula, Tilly. He tells them they no longer have to leave home for four years at great expense to go to college. They can get two years right at home, the rest later, when they're older and the commitment and cost are reduced by half.

The community college opened in the fall of 1975 and already is straining under a student load it didn't expect to reach until 1980. Thus it is difficult to say whether the school is a result of the area's rapid growth, or a cause of it, or both. It most certainly is a factor. There are others.

"The back-to-earth movement is a real thing," Baker said. "I don't mean the hippie communes, I mean the need everybody seems to feel to get to a place unspoiled, uncrowded. Maybe it's a result of the environmental movement. With me, at my rate, it's almost mystical. There's a permanence to these hills that gives my life stability.

"Still, about twice a year my wife and I take off for a weekend in New Orleans. We need that, too. The point is, you can do both now. Travel nowadays is so easy that you don't have to move to the city to taste its fruits. You can satisfy those periodic hunger pangs with visits. That was not true in the days before campers and interstates and motels at every crossroads.

"It's also true that television has taken some of the mystery out of the big cities. The six o'clock news gives some people as much contact with the concrete as they really want."

Baker spoke of yet another factor, more subtle because it deals with attitudes. It's a recent development, perhaps a spinoff of the rebirth of ethnic pride so evident in the past decade.

"We've developed a pride in our local culture. I don't mean that in the past a person would say, 'I'm moving to Kansas City to work because I'm ashamed of my land,' but it was part of the reason, a subconscious thing. I know, I grew up here. Now we've gone full circle and proudly celebrate the customs and folkways of the Ozarks. I would guess the same is true in other parts of the country."

Perhaps, but it is also true that there are more opportunities to work in Harrison today because of an influx of new industry lured by Harrison's own efforts and tax breaks granted by the state.

Federal programs, too, begun years ago are now ripening, bettering the rural quality of life. Boone County has received more than $1 million in federal revenue-sharing funds since the program began in 1972. Harrison's first sewer system was a New Deal project of the Thirties; today, with federal help, towns like Harrison can have an airport. Federal funds are in evidence everywhere you look: libraries, hospitals, parks. Right now Harrison is planning a new civic center, with federal help. Federal recreational projects have brought tourist dollars to the Ozarks and also attracted battalions of retired persons, who today can quit work at a younger age with larger incomes. Canoe traffic on the spectacular Buffalo River nearby was up 21 per cent last year.

With more money to spend and a better educated, better traveled citizenry to direct growth, Harrison and towns like it have become considerably more sophisticated than the Grover's Corners of a prior era. The Boar's Head Players, for example, provide Harrison with fine amateur theater. The North Arkansas Concert Association imports programs from November through April, fare such as the St. Louis Symphony, the Stan Kenton orchestra, the Norman Luboff Choir. There are dances at the country club. (dues: $180 a year), poolside parties, tennis, golf. Mencken would have a hard time recognizing today's "yokels."

"In many ways we've got the best of both worlds," said Bevan Dunlap, executive vice president of the Harrison Chamber of Commerce. "In fact, some people are worrying, a bit prematurely I think, that we're going too fast, getting too big."

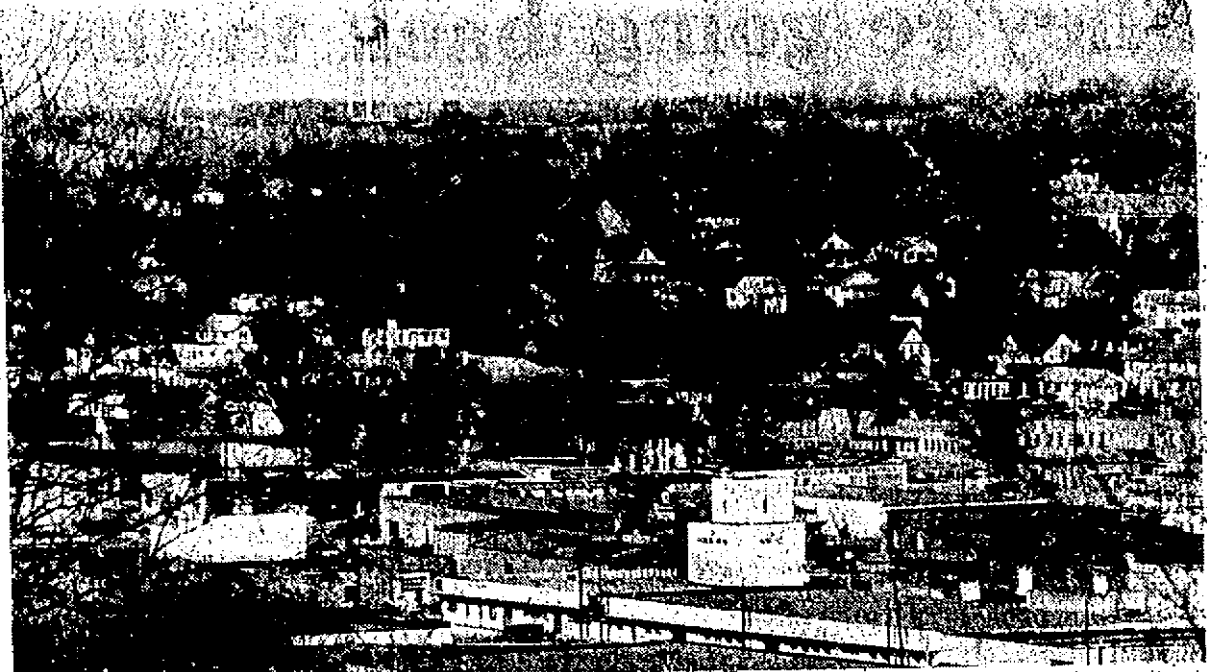

Over the past five years Harrison has lured to its industrial park, once a cow pasture on the edge of town, manufacturers of such diverse products as fishing rods, meat processing equipment and electronic air purifiers (ironically, since Ozark air tests out as just about the purest in the land) to complement established plants that turn out products from patio grills to parking meters, metal furniture, chalk boards, paper boxes, insulated glass and ornamental iron.

Unlike so many small towns of the past, Harrison is decidedly not dependent on one or two dominating factories. In fact, one argument for establishing the community college was a local need for a wide assortment of skills.

"If other towns our size haven't done as well it's because they haven't tried," Dunlap said, riffling through a stack of current requests from industries for information about Harrison.

"Even the fact that we have no railroad or interstate or waterway hasn't been a large liability. In some ways it's been a blessing in disguise. We've attracted clean industries rather than the heavy, smoke-belching type that could harm the character of Harrison."

It would, indeed, be a shame to harm the character of Harrison. There is, as Bill Baker said, something stabilizing about an oak-shaded courthouse square surrounded by tidy shops; about reading your neighbor's name in "Today's Birthdays" listed in the daily paper along with the

weighty world news; about hearing a radio announcer with an identifiable regional accent report on the turkey-calling contest in, where else, Yellville; about shutting down the plant the first day of deer season, as

Howard McColley does, because nobody will show up for work anyhow.

"I talk to a lot of newcomers who come in to open their accounts," said Jerry McFarland, president of the First National Bank. "They all think they've died and gone to heaven." (The First National, incidentally, doubled its deposits in five years, to the day.)

What the newcomers have found, one learns by asking them, is maybe not heaven but a pleasant place on earth, a small town, where the amenities of the big city have become increasingly available, or at least accessible.

Small wonder America's mobile society is so rapidly making that discovery.

CHOO! Don't sit up waiting for a cold cure

By EDWARD EDELSON

NEW YORK — One of the things you may have noticed lately is that there is no cure for the common cold.

That may not surprise you, but it is rather a surprise to some scientists and physicians. Ten or 15

Genetics lab rules proposed

By JUDITH RANDAL
Knight News Service
WASHINGTON — A prestigious scientific committee has proposed rules that would permit researchers to transplant genes from one form of life to another without risk of creating dangerous new germs.

The rules — made available Saturday before their release today at a National Institutes of Health meeting — were proposed as a means to end a scientific controversy that involves the well-being of the public.

One faction has maintained that the genetics-engineering experiments are crucial to medical progress, the development of better drugs and the creation of new plant strains to feed a hungry world. The other has been hesitant lest germs resulting from the gene transplants escape from the laboratory and prove impossible to control.

Dr. Donald S. Fredrickson, the institutes' director, will decide on how strict the rules should be after listening to two days of public debate on the issue this week. Meanwhile, thanks to the controversy, the experiments have been suspended for more than a year.

The new technology was made possible by the discovery about six years ago that certain enzymes could be used to snip lengths of the genetic material called DNA into precisely predetermined bits. This, in turn, has enabled scientists to put into bacteria genes from other species and strains of bacteria, viruses or other organisms.

The experiments have made it possible for man to break the species barrier and cause living things that are genetically totally dissimilar to mate and reproduce.

"This unique feature promises revolutionary potential both for the investigation of basic biological processes and for approaches to important practical problems in medicine and agriculture," the advisory committee said in the preamble to its suggested rules.

The rules would classify experiments funded by the government according to their potential risk. Some would be ruled out as too dangerous, others would have to be conducted in special isolation laboratories — there are about a dozen in this country — and still others could be undertaken with less stringent precautions.

Two kinds of safety measures are available and could easily be combined. One requires good laboratory equipment and rigorously trained personnel. The other involves the use of bacteria which have only one chance in a billion of survival if accidentally released into the outside world. For example, scientists have created bacteria that cannot live within normal temperature ranges or unless supplied with special forms of nourishment.

Whatever rules Fredrickson decides on, they will apply to all American scientists whose work is funded by the government and almost certainly will be observed by privately funded researchers and scientists in other nations, too.

Want to sell that motorcycle or bike? A Classified Ad is the answer! HE 2-5569 years ago you could find quite a few experts who believed that the mid-1960s was a reasonable time to expect either a vaccine that would prevent a common cold or a drug that would cure it.

Today we have neither. What went wrong?

The vaccine idea was done in by the knowledge that many, many viruses were to blame and that they couldn't build a successful vaccine on a package of those viruses.

Now scientists know that there are about 150 different viruses capable of causing a cold. It's impossible to build protection against all those viruses into one vaccine. So there isn't going to be a vaccine against the common cold.

How about an anticold drug? Well, if you doctor yourself, you can choose from many well-advertised over-the-counter products that have been described by competent medical authorities as having roughly the same effectiveness as chicken soup. If you go to a physician, there's a good chance of coming away with a prescription for an antibiotic that can cause serious side effects, but is ineffective against the cold. Antibiotics fight bacteria, not viruses, and a cold is a viral infection.

So why aren't there good antiviral drugs around? That question got attention from the experts who met here last week in the New York Academy of Sciences' Third Conference on Antiviral Substances. Their conclusion: The drugs aren't available for reasons that include money, scientific difficulties and psychology.

Dr. Ernest C. Herrmann Jr. of the Peoria School of Medicine, chairman of the conference, put the stress on the attitude of pharmaceutical company decision-makers: "There are people in important positions who harbor the idea that developing antiviral drugs is not possible," he said.

To Herrmann, the main problem is "convincing people that antiviral drugs are the way to go." But to others at the conference, the scientific problems of developing such drugs loom larger.

The challenge is to kill the viruses without killing human cells, which isn't easy. A virus is a very small parasite, consisting of a small bit of genetic material wearing a protein coat. The virus invades a cell (which is a much larger, more complicated entity), seizes control of the cell's apparatus and makes many more viruses that invade other cells.

The most promising antiviral drugs, said Dr. J.L. Melnick of Baylor University College of Medicine, cause so much damage to cells in the process of stopping the virus that they can't be used for treating illnesses, especially minor ailments such as the common cold.

A decade ago, there were high hopes for interferon, a virus-fighting compound that is produced by living cells. Anything that is created by cells to fight invaders offers obvious safety advantages: antibiotics, for example, are products of living organisms.

Alas, interferon has turned out to be expensive to isolate, difficult to characterize and nearly impossible to use in ordinary clinical situations. At the moment, interferon is, if anything, less promising than it was 10 years ago.

Some synthetic antiviral compounds have come along and are on the road to the patient. Two of those compounds, ribavirin, which seems to attack a large number of viruses and could be usable against influenza and the cold, and isoprinosine, another candidate for a cold cure, got their share of attention at the conference.

Enter the final consideration: money. The Food and Drug Administration requires extensive testing for drug approval, and that testing can strain a company's financial resources.

A single test using 60 volunteers can cost $25,000, said Robert W. Sidel of ICG Pharmaceuticals, Inc., which owns ribavirin.

MR. KITCHEN'S

CALL 597-5561

Literally dozens of such tests, with a total cost of perhaps $2.5 million, are needed to get FDA approval of the drug for use against any specific illness — and ribavirin is being tested for several different illnesses.

The drug already is being sold in Mexico and other countries where controls are much less strict. The reason for going slow in the United States is the possibility of side effects. In some animal tests, the drug has been found to cause birth defects (the label says it should not be used by women of child-bearing age), and high doses have been found to cause anemia in some subjects.

All of these barriers — psychological, scientific, financial — are surmountable, but not quickly. With luck, you can look for an antiviral drug such as ribavirin to reach the American market this side of 1980. But that's no help this cold, windy winter. Anyway, gesundheit.

Canada paying off Indians for 'stolen' lands

By JIM POLING
Canadian Press Writer

OTTAWA, Canada — A Blackfoot Indian chief meeting before the beginning of this century with two government treaty negotiators dropped to his knees and pulled up a clump of parched Canadian prairie.

"As a present," he told the white men, "we will give you anything we have that you can take with you. But the land, never!"

Control of that land passed inevitably to the white people, some huge parcels signed away in treaties, some merely absorbed as a new Canadian society rolled relentlessly west and north.

Now, more than 100 years after the first treaties were signed, the Canadian government has admitted that the natives still have valid claims to vast tracts, and negotiation of those claims has begun.

The native people are claiming more than 1.8 million square miles, almost one-half the total area of Canada, and much of it immensely rich in resources. They say these are their traditional lands, never ceded to Ottawa or, in some cases, signed away through misunderstanding.

Indians in the United States have started numerous state and federal court actions claiming treaty violations. The Indian Claims Commission alone has about 150 land right cases before it for consideration. In Maine, for example, two tribes which claim two-thirds of the land of that state have instituted a suit for $300 million.

Involved in Canada are five basic areas: northern Quebec, on which agreement has been reached; the east side of the Northwest Territories, claimed by Eskimos; the Northwest Territories' west side, claimed by Indians; the Yukon, and most areas of British Columbia in Canada's Pacific coast.

Canada has 235,215 Indians and Metis (mixed French and Indian people) and about 20,000 Eskimos. There are about 500,000 Indians in the United States under government supervision.

The Quebec agreement, settling a claim on 132,000 square miles, an area slightly smaller than New Mexico, must be ratified within the next two months by 6,000 Cree and 4,000 Eskimos.

Basically, it gives the native people $225 million in tax-free funds over the next 20 years and exclusive fishing, hunting and trapping rights on 60,000 square miles, an area about the size of Georgia.

The natives in return must give up all their land rights, with the exception of lands in and around their communities, and agree to halt legal action aimed at stopping the giant James Bay hydro-electric project.

This is the first major native land-claims settlement in modern Canada.

The 15,000 Eskimos of the Northwest Territories are claiming 750,000 square miles, an area three times larger than Texas. The claim covers vast areas of potential mineral deposits, including the oil and natural gas-rich Mackenzie Delta. But James Arvaluk, president of Inuit Tapirisat (Eskimo brotherhood), says his people are not interested in a settlement similar to that in northern Quebec. He says they do not want to stifle development, but want a say in how their territory is developed.

If the natives' claim is accepted, the so-called barren lands will become a separate territory called Nunavut (Our Land) with an eventual goal of self-government.

In the western section, the Indians and Metis have joined to claim 450,000 square miles of the 1.3-million-square-mile Northwest Territories. They say they want control over the land — twice the size of France — and not outright payment for it, and recognition as a nation within a nation.

In this case, the Indians surrendered the land in treaties signed in 1899 and 1921. But Justice William Morrow of the Northwest Territories Supreme Court ruled in 1973 that the 16,000 natives have a legal claim.

Ottawa has refused to say the treaties are invalid, although it has offered to negotiate. A monetary settlement of between $3 million and $5 billion has been mentioned.

However, the natives, who call themselves Dene (The People), say they want to be landlord over the territory, granting leases to resource companies and using the rent to finance development projects in their communities.

EDWIN ZDOVEC
Extremists' Victim?

Diplomat killed by gunmen

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Two gunmen assassinated a Yugoslav diplomat in a hail of revolver bullets Saturday as the 45-year-old father of two prepared to back his car out of the garage of his suburban home and drive to work.

Police said the identities of the killers of Consul Edvin Zdovec were unknown but did not rule out that the men were Croatian separatists. The West German government says several hundred extremists from the northwestern Yugoslav region around Zagreb operate in this country.

A caller to a New York radio station, WINS, said the Young Croatian Army for Freedom claimed responsibility for the shooting. He also said the group had shot five other persons in West Germany, but German officials had no such reports. The same group claimed responsibility for a bombing at the Yugoslav diplomatic mission in New York last year.

Developing countries' food production gains

By VICTOR SIMPSON

ROME (AP)—Preliminary figures show that developing countries had record food productions in 1975, marking a promising advance in the war on world hunger, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) here reported. It cautioned, however, that it had not yet established any firm trend that would signify a major breakthrough.

Food shortages requiring emergency outside assistance are now reported only in the Comoro Islands, Lebanon and Timor, all three troubled by internal strife. A year ago, there were 14 countries requiring outside assistance, including India, Bangladesh and Somalia.

The FAO attributed production increases chiefly to favorable weather conditions. India's rice crop, for example, was helped by the mildest monsoon in 20 years, it said.

FAO added that a heavier emphasis placed on agriculture by the traditionally hungry countries also played a role.

Yet, the organization still lists a half-billion persons as underfed or malnourished in a hunger belt stretching across Africa, Asia and portions of Latin America.

But in an optimistic assessment of the short-term food needs of the developing world—over the next six to nine months—an FAO spokesman said: "We are out of a crisis period. The problem is not to find the food, but the money. The food is there to be bought."

The developing countries as a whole achieved a record production of rice, wheat and coarse grains (corn, oats and barley) of 360 million tons, up 8 percent from 1974.

This was accomplished against a background of poor harvests in the Soviet Union and its Eastern European allies, which slowed the growth of total world food production, FAO analysts said. The Soviet government has confirmed that the 1975 grain harvest of 140 million tons was its worst in a decade.

FAO statistics showed that the developing countries marked their third successive yearly increase in production of wheat, the world's staple, which rose to 81.2 million tons in 1975 from 73.1 million tons the year before. Gains in the rice harvest were recorded as even greater, totaling 130 million tons, compared with 118 million in 1974.

In the same period, the developed countries, led by the United States, increased wheat production slightly from 138.7 million to 141.8 million tons, the preliminary figures showed.

Food specialists here say they are watching this year's harvests closely to see if the developing world is moving toward some level of self-sufficiency. The specially convened World Food Conference, held in Rome in 1974, stressed the urgency of developing agriculture in the Third World as the only solution to its dependency on the world marketplace or on outside aid.

Third World meeting ends

MANILA (AP) — A major conference of Third World representatives ended Saturday with general agreement on pressing the industrial countries for a "new international economic order."

But it left unsettled a fight among members over access of landlocked states to the sea and a proposal to set up a permanent conference office.

In a final document the ministers expressed impatience with the lack of progress so far and declared their "firm conviction to make full use of the bargaining power of the developing countries, through joint action" to gain a better deal for commodity producers. They also sought reorganization of world industrial production and reform of the international monetary system.

In speaking of bargaining and joint action, the ministers apparently referred to the power some Third World countries have through their control of oil and other vital commodities.

The conference, held in preparation for negotiations with developed countries in Nairobi, Kenya, in May, left the Third World "more and better prepared" for the talks, Philippines Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo said. Romulo served as conference president.

During the debate the meeting was closed to reporters. Conference authorities gave no reason.

Conference sources said Afghanistan proposed to reaffirm in the working committee's report the right of sea access. Iran and Pakistan, controlling the land routes from Afghanistan to the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean, objected and said the move was part of a Soviet effort to gain trade access to the Indian Ocean and to India.

The sources said the dispute lasted seven hours. The Philippine delegation proposed that the final document include both views, citing "reservations" expressed in the matter by some countries.

CARLOS P. ROMULO
"Better Prepared"

Conference officials said another point of disagreement was over a proposal to form a permanent secretariat for the Group of 77, as the organization of Third World ministers started in 1964 is known, to prepare for negotiations with the industrial world.

3 Russians reported dead in Angola war

By BRIAN JEFFRIES

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Western-backed forces fighting Communist-supplied troops in Angola said Saturday they killed three Russians in fighting around the coastal city of Novo Redondo.

A statement issued by the National Union (UNITA) also charged that for the first time Algerian pilots were being used to fly missile-carrying planes backing the Cuban and Soviet-supported forces of the Popular Movement (MPLA) in the Angolan civil war.

There was no independent verification of the charges and no immediate comment from the Soviet Union or Algeria.

The Russians were killed Friday, the statement said, during fighting between UNITA forces and an MPLA "guerrilla band" composed of Russians and Cubans around Novo Redondo, which is still reportedly in UNITA hands.

The aerial attacks have been concentrated around the inland central Angola town of Mussende, which UNITA confirmed earlier this week has been retaken by the MPLA.

The statement added that the aerial attacks by the missile-carrying planes, the make of which it did not identify, were expected to result in a high level of civilian casualties.

The statement did not say how UNITA was able to identify the pilots as Algerians.

Meanwhile, sources here said that the 15 British mercenaries wounded in the Angola fighting were being cared for in Kinshasa's main hospital.

The British Embassy said so far it had received no requests for aid from any of those wounded, "but if any requests are received we will give them the same consideration as any appeals for help from British citizens."

Earlier this week Zaire banned foreign mercenaries from passing through Kinshasa on their way to fight in Angola, but it made clear that any wishing to return home could do so through Zaire.

More than 200 British mercenaries were reported ed fighting in Angola, the majority of them with the Western-backed National Front (FNLA), which has been pushed back into a narrow strip of northern Angola bordering Zaire in recent reverses inflicted by the MPLA.

An American reporter said FNLA defenders had been driven out of San Antonio do Zaire, the last major FNLA stronghold in the north.

Robin Wright of the Christian Science Monitor said Saturday in Kinshasa that she had been permitted to enter San Antonio do Zaire earlier in the week. She said that on Friday at 8:45 a.m., MPLA troops led by Cubans in tanks and armored cars entered the city and were in control within a half hour. Most of the residents fled along with the FNLA soldiers, she reported.

It was not known if the MPLA-Cuban occupation of San Antonio do Zaire was part of an offensive to drive the FNLA out of the rest of the northern border strip.

The FNLA now controls only two towns near the Zaire border, San Salvador and Maquela do Zombo, according to information in Kinshasa.

The Latin Americans were reported to fear that an institutionalized group opened the possibility of having Libya or Algeria heading it for a fixed period.

Judges appeal

Turk, U.S. pact near—but shaky

New York Times Service

ANKARA, Turkey — Turkey and the United States have made substantial progress in negotiating a new agreement on 26 American military installations but important differences remain, according to well-informed diplomats.

Accordingly, it is uncertain whether a draft of the pact will be ready before Foreign Minister Ihsan S. Cagyalangil visits Washington next week. The Americans would like the foreign minister to sign a new agreement during his trip. They then could resume operations at five intelligence-gathering installations in Turkey that have been idle since July.

The bases reflect a deeper problem in relations between Turkey and the United States, which have been allies since Washington proclaimed the Truman Doctrine in 1948 and took responsibility for Turkey's security.

"The real question," said a diplomat, "is whether their partnership will produce a stable, creditable deterrent at this end of NATO."

Most Turks are still bitter over the ban imposed last year on American arms sales. The mood has improved slightly since the ban was relaxed in October and negotiations on a new pact began, but the mood is still chilly.

One key to the relationship is Cyprus, since it was the Turkish use of American arms to invade the island in 1974 that led to the embargo. Talks between Greek and Turkish Cypriots are to resume in Vienna on Feb. 17. But few analysts here are optimistic.

Senators 'using U.S. computer to aid campaigns'

By BROOKS JACKSON

Baker said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some U.S. senators are keeping mailing lists of campaign donors, political volunteers and party workers in the Senate computer at taxpayer expense, according to court testimony.

The computer is used to address only mail sent under the franking privilege, with postage also paid by the taxpayers.

Joyce P. Baker, a former mail specialist for several Senate Republicans including John Tower, Charles Mathias and J. Glenn Beall, testified that one such mailing list was labeled simply "Fat Cats."

Others contain names and addresses of potential donors to future campaigns, potential campaign workers and even persons who have contributed money to the opposing party, Miss avoid embarrassing them.

Subpoenas were issued last week to the top aides of each of the 100 U.S. senators. Common Cause lawyer Kenneth Guido is seeking the keys with which to decipher the special-interest mailing list kept by many senators on the Senate computer.

In a recent court hearing, Guido used the case of "Senator 73" to illustrate for the judges the kind of information he is seeking.

He said Miss Baker's testimony showed that the senator used the computer to keep 50 lists of past or potential campaign donors, campaign volunteers, Republican Party club members and even persons who had received government jobs with the senator's help.

But the same senator had only six lists of constituents interested in legislative issues.

"So that what you find in terms of communicating with constituents on any issue, you have only six categories. You have approximately 50 which appear to me to be politically oriented," Guido said.

He is seeking information, now a closely kept secret, on how much taxpayer-financed mail each member of Congress sends to special-interest groups.

"Senator 73's" mailing lists included breakdowns of registered voters by party, enabling him to select only Democrats or only Republicans or even American Independent Party members to receive a certain tax-paid mailing.

Miss Baker's testimony, filed with the court late last year but until now unreported, contained other examples.

"Senator 8" sent three different "Dear fellow pilot" letters at taxpayer expense to a list of licensed fliers in his state obtained from the Federal Aviation Administration.

The same senator also sent taxpayer-financed letters about the consumer Product Safety Commission to a list of accountants and a letter critical of the minimum-wage law to a list of members of the National Federation of Independent Businessmen.

While on the public payroll in 1973 and 1974 Miss Baker assisted a number of senators in assembling mailing lists, including even names of registered Washington lobbyists.

"When I go after lists, I just go after as many special-interest lists as I can go after," she testified.

Her clients were not always successful. She said of one, "He is no longer a senator ... I guess it didn't work."

The client was identified only as "Senator 44."

The court record shows Miss Baker testified about the lists only after a lengthy legal battle. When first subpoenaed last year she pulled a number of documents from her file with the help of a lawyer who once worked for Tower.

She refused to turn over the material until the court threatened to hold her in contempt. She then testified that the documents had been transferred to Sen. Tower's office. Miss Baker now has a different lawyer.

At one point in the testimony Guido asked about the two-letter codes Miss Baker used to identify various lists of party officials and campaign donors kept on the computer by one of her bosses.

Q: "There was a list FC and entitled 'Fat Cats.' Where did you acquire that list?"

A: "That was acquired before I got there, prior to 1973 ... It had 30 (names) on there and I didn't care. I just kept it on for the heck of it."

'Think tank' for Congress set up

From Our National Bureau
WASHINGTON — The Institute for Congress, a congressional "think tank" estimated to cost $22.5 million over five years with much of the money coming from Congress, has quietly been established here.

The commission is headed by a 10-term former congresswoman and a Washington lobbyist, who is using the skills he learned in government to fight some of the regulations he helped create.

The institute describes itself as "a nonpartisan research organization devoted exclusively to providing both houses of Congress with timely and independent policy analysis of major policy issues confronting the United States." It is expected to employ a staff of 80.

The Congress already has individual staffs, committee staffs, the Library of Congress, the Congressional Research Service and the General Accounting Office to provide research, information and evaluation.

The institute's chairwoman is former Rep. Martha W. Griffiths, who practices law in Michigan as well as serving on the Chrysler Corp. board.

The vice chairman is William Ruckelshaus, first administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency former acting director of the FBI and former U.S. deputy attorney general.

Ruckelshaus is now a Washington lobbyist and lawyer. A number of his clients are the industries he attempted to regulate as head of the EPA, and a number of his cases involve EPA regulations.

The purpose of the institute is to provide Congress with original thought.

VA hospital hearing

By BOB HOUSER

Political Editor

Rep. Mark W. Hannaford, D-Long Beach and West Orange County, announced Saturday that the House Veterans Affairs subcommittee on hospitals will conduct a hearing from 9:30 a.m. to noon Friday at Long Beach Veterans Administration Hospital, focusing on the quality of patient care in VA hospitals.

Hannaford and Rep. David Satterfield, D-Va., will chair the hearing. Scheduled to testify are representatives from Southland veterans' organizations and VA hospital physicians and administrators. The congressmen will make a brief inspection of the hospital after the hearing.

In another matter, Hannaford testified Thursday before the House subcommittee on Social Security, calling for reform of the system to insure that senior citizens will not lose their benefits if they choose to work in a part-time job after retirement.

Hannaford has written legislation to increase the earnings limitation for Social Security recipients from $2,760 to $3,600.

"My major concern," said Hannaford, "relates to the injustice and considerable social consequences of limiting the opportunity of Social Security recipients to work for wages."

He also urged the subcommittee to adopt legislation permitting recipients to remarry without being threatened with a reduction in benefits.

Deuk vs. Kunstler

State Sen. George Deukmejian, R-Long Beach, has appealed to the California State Bar to repudiate recent remarks attributed to attorney William M. Kunstler, to wit: "I don't disagree with murder sometimes, especially political assassinations."

Deukmejian also asked the California Conference of Judges to demand an explanation from Kunstler and, if that explanation is unsatisfactory, to intervene to prevent his association with any future California court cases.

Labeling Kunstler's reputed remarks as "reckless and barbaric," Deukmejian said, "Surely legal ethics will not support such public statements which reflect detrimentally on the legal profession in the nation."

GOP women

Mrs. Arlene Solomon, of the Bicentennial Speakers Bureau, will speak at the Wednesday noon luncheon meeting of the Long Beach Council of Republican Women Federated in the Lafayette Hotel Embassy Room.

Ford aides think job rate will surpass predictions

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — One month doesn't tell the tale, but administration economists believe the employment situation may be much better this year than predicted.

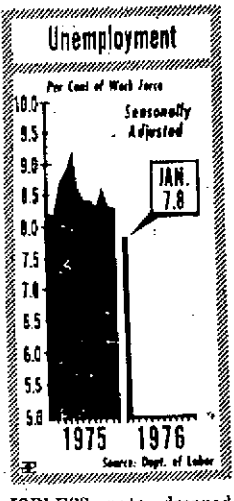

If it is, it could be a great help to President Ford's campaign.

The January employment report, which came out Friday, showed a one-month drop in the jobless rate from 8.3 to 7.8 per cent, which was much better than anyone in the administration had predicted.

And it was no fluke top administration economists said.

"Frankly, I think the report was just phenomenal. It has greatly surpassed my expectations," said Burton G. Malkiel, member of Ford's Council of Economic Advisers.

He said it was that "we have been correct in our thinking that we've employment such as this could very well indicate we've been too pessimistic," Malkiel said in an interview. But he added he would wait another month "before saying that."

Sidney L. Jones, assistant treasury secretary for economic affairs, said in a separate interview that a number of administration economists believe that unemployment will be better than forecast this year.

The administration has been predicting an average unemployment rate for the year of 7.7 per cent, with a drop to about 7.3 per cent by the end of the year.

It is not as easy to get to 7.3 per cent as it might look, however, since additions to the labor force, including previously discouraged workers who had dropped out, could outnumber the new jobs created in months ahead.

But Malkiel said unemployment is bound to get better. "I think it will drop further," he said.

The January statistics showed solid employment growth of the kind that the administration has been hoping for. Most of the gains were in manufacturing, including the auto industry, and most of those who found jobs were workers who had been laid off previously.

The jobless rate for blue-collar workers declined to 9.4 per cent in January from 10.7 per cent in December.

The gains probably will serve to quiet some critics of Ford's employment policies, at least temporarily. Until the January report, even some Republicans in Congress, such as Sen. Henry Bellmon, R-Okla., were predicting that Ford would be in trouble at the polls in November if greater progress was not made in employment.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., an ardent Ford critic, said he was pleased because "the hole in the doughnut got smaller and the doughnut itself got bigger, so that we'll all have more to eat."

Not everything is improved, Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., said Friday he is still concerned over the 13 per cent jobless rate for blacks and 19 per cent rate for teenagers.

He also said gains in auto employment may be only temporary because of possible stockpiling of autos by makers in advance of wage talks next summer.

Nevertheless, Jones said there is a good chance of better progress against unemployment in 1976 than predicted.

In 1975 it did not happen that way. The administration predicted an average unemployment rate of 8.1 per cent, but it turned out to be 8.7 per cent.

By contrast, progress was better on inflation in 1975. Instead of an 11.3 per cent increase in the Consumer Price Index, on the average, the increase was 9.1 per cent.

Jones said the inflation forecast for 1976 of an average 6.3 per cent probably would prove close to accurate.

500 domestic auto dealers folded in '75

DETROIT (AP) — More than 500 domestic new-car dealerships went out of business during recession-plagued 1975, the steepest drop in five years and the 20th year in a row that the number of auto outlets has declined.

According to an annual survey by the trade journal Automotive News, the number of dealers franchised with U.S. auto companies fell by 527 during last year to a modern-day low of 24,453. The last time more dealerships disappeared in a single year was in 1970, when there was a drop of 945.

The latest count is down to about half the number of dealerships around just after World War II and compares with 41,000 that were doing business in 1938, when the steady decline began.

Industry analysts attribute the sharp drop last year to the severe recession that crippled auto sales. By contrast, 369 outlets folded in 1974, when the industry was depressed by concerns over fuel shortages, and only 92 disappeared in the record sales year of 1973.

The 20-year decline in the number of dealerships has been attributed to the demise of all but four auto manufacturers, increased competitive pressures in obtaining franchises and the huge investments now required to operate a new-car outlet.

According to the Auto News survey, Chrysler Corp. dealers accounted for more than half the total decline in 1975, with a loss of 303. That gave Chrysler — which suffered the industry's biggest sales decline last year — 4,839 dealers at the start of 1976, compared with 5,142 the year before.

General Motors lost 110 dealers, leaving the auto giant with 11,750. Ford Motor Co. started the year with 8,641 outlets, a decline of 65, and American Motors began 1976 with 1,813 dealerships, a loss of 49.

Auto News pointed out that the biggest decline occurred during the first quarter of the year and eased with each successive three-month period — an indication of the industry's slow recovery from its worst slump in four decades.

There were 213 failures in the first quarter, 155 in the second, 101 in the third and 58 in the fourth.

GM chief foresees no UAW strike this year

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The chairman of General Motors expressed confidence Saturday that the car maker and the United Auto Workers could agree on an equitable labor contract this fall without a strike.

In remarks far more conciliatory than other recent speeches on forthcoming contract talks covering 750,000 auto workers, Thomas A. Murphy praised UAW leaders for their "intelligence and far-sightedness."

"If our evaluation in this regard is accurate — and we believe it is — then should we not be confident that an equitable settlement, without any shutdown, will be achieved in 1976?" said Murphy. "And that is what we will strive for — no more, no less."

"It should be clear to everyone that an equitable outcome achieved without any stoppage of production is in the best interest of everyone."

He added that the severe sales slump, plant

THOMAS A. MURPHY
Conciliatory Talk

shutdowns and layoffs during the past two years have given the industry "only too recent an experience with the hardships, both personal and economic, that are brought on by a disruption of production."

Murphy urged the UAW to pursue a settlement that provides improvements in line with increases in national productivity.

"Only in this way, by the closer balance of increased compensation with increased productivity, can American industry remain competitive," he said, "not only in our dealings in overseas markets but in resisting the incursions of foreign products into the markets here at home."

Murphy's remarks came in a keynote address at the annual convention of the National Automobile Dealers Association, which opened Friday night and runs through Wednesday.

Current three-year contracts between the four major car makers and the UAW expire in September.

The union, which likely will push for more job security, a reduced work week and improved layoff benefits as top priorities, has warned the companies not to use the economy as an excuse for denying workers contract improvements at the bargaining table.

The UAW, while saying it hopes to avoid a strike, also has warned that it is prepared for one if necessary, despite a two-year auto slump that has led to the layoff of thousands of workers.

In recent months, Murphy in uncharacteristically harsh language — has criticized UAW proposals for a shorter work week as unproductive and unfeasible.

He said Saturday that UAW members are among the best industrial workers in the world and have been protected against inflation because of cost-of-living clauses in their contracts.

But he added that the high labor costs have burdened the auto companies and contributed in part to higher new-car prices.

'Secret' low-rate loans told

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — A discounted prime lending rate, known as the "super-prime," has appeared in the nation's banking system because of slack demand for commercial loans and the fairly wide profit margins currently in effect on bank credit.

Bankers and money-market analysts report that some banks are trying to attract business competitively by charging a quarter or half point less than the posted prime rate on loans to the biggest and most credit-worthy corporate borrowers.

Great secrecy surrounds the practice, reflecting the reluctance of banks to have their prime customers know that other prime customers are being given preferential treatment. The borrowers benefiting from the practice also refuse to discuss it, fearing they may lose their rate advantage.

"They've got to deny it," said A. Gary Shilling, an economist for White, Weld & Company, "but I know of about half-a-dozen that are in this category. These are major banks, not small country banks."

"We don't have a super-prime rate here," said John F. McGillicuddy, president of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., "but we have heard of some out-of-town banks that have offered loans foregoing the normal considerations, and we have heard of some offers below the prime."

MARKET DAY was Saturday at New York Stock Exchange, where some workers had their children in tow as they labored to catch up on backlog of paper work from record trading levels of recent weeks. Last previous Saturday worked by employees on exchange floor was Feb. 21, 1969.

Shares in brokerages seen as a good buy for investors

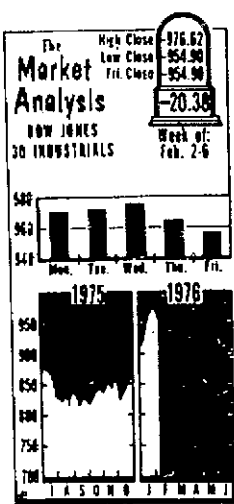

By LEONARD WIENER
Knight News Service

A booming stock market has meant more than just gains in the Dow Jones industrial average and a securities industry trying to handle heavy trading volume.

It also has meant a lot of profitable business for stock brokers, who already were enjoying a turnaround from hard times before the latest trading surge began this year.

Many large brokerages are publicly owned, and the trend of their own shares in recent weeks has been sharply upward. In fact, an investor could have done better buying stock-broker shares rather than other shares brokers were trading for their customers.

The Money Manager, a financial weekly, tracks the market performance of 13 stock brokerage firms, and its index for the week ending last Tuesday shows an overall gain of 65 per cent this year. The index is almost twice what it was a year ago.

The Dow Jones industrial average in the comparable period this year rose 15 per cent and was up 39 per cent from a year ago. The New York Stock Exchange Index did roughly the same.

Stock prices fell last Thursday and Friday, reflecting profit-taking and concern over rising interest rates.

The gains by brokerage-firm stocks follows earnings gains. A New York Stock Exchange survey of more than 400 member firms found a combined profit of $386 million for the first 11 months of 1975, compared with a $75 million loss in the period a year earlier.

More recently, Merrill Lynch & Co. reported a 52 per cent jump in fourth-quarter profits and a 155 per cent gain in full-year profits. The dividend was boosted by a third.

Profits rose 196 per cent in the fiscal second quarter at Shearson Hayden Stone, 9 per cent in the fourth quarter and 253 per cent for the year at E. F. Hutton and 5 per cent in the fourth quarter and 179 per cent for the year at Reynolds Securities.

The surge this year in the value of stock-brokerage shares parallels an increase in average daily trading volume at the New York Stock Exchange from less than 19 million shares during December to more than 30 million shares so far this year.

Thomas S. Hyland Jr., editor-in-chief at Standard & Poor's Corp., explains that "brokerage earnings are a function of market volume and, theoretically at least, the higher the volume the higher the profits should be."

One reason S. & P. doesn't forecast brokerage firm earnings is because that means trying to forecast highly volatile stock-market volume, he said.

The heavy trading this year, along with healthy volume last year, has eased the impact on brokerage firms of negotiated commission rates, observers also note.

While there is no indication yet that heavy trading this year is overburdening Wall Street, late hours and weekend work have been necessary.

The latest runup in brokerage stocks has not erased some earlier losses, and the Money Manager index is still 20 per cent below its base level at the end of 1971.

The Dow average is up 10 per cent from that point.

Despite investor interest, brokers don't do much analysis of brokerage stocks — it's too much like self-analysis, said one outside analyst.

Secret Witness summary, rewards

The Independent, Press-Telegram's Secret Witness program has resulted in the arrest of 62 criminal suspects and fugitives from justice since the program was inaugurated on June 10, 1972, with rewards totaling $42,500 paid or committed on conviction of suspects waiting trial. Additional reward money available for informants is specified in the cases below, one of the selected and varying summaries of 10 Secret Witness cases printed in the Independent and Press-Telegram each Sunday and Thursday.

Cases are dropped from the summaries from time to time, but rewards will remain in effect for those until such cases have been closed by police or until notification in print that reward offers have been withdrawn.

Rewards also will be paid for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspects in any other major criminal cases, whether covered in these summaries or not, and for the apprehension of fugitives from justice. These rewards will vary in amount depending on the seriousness of the offense.

To ensure eligibility for Secret Witness rewards, informants are required to channel all information directly through Secret Witness — that is, to notify Secret Witness first — either by calling the special Secret Witness telephone number or by writing in care of the Secret Witness post office box.

Today's summaries follow:

How to become a Secret Witness

Secret Witness seeks information from the public leading to the capture of fugitives and the arrest and conviction of criminals.

For this purpose a guaranteed fund of $100,000 has been established by the Independent, Press-Telegram to be used for rewards of varying amounts. Identities of informants will be kept secret.

You will be paid a reward if the information you give Secret Witness results in the arrest and conviction of a criminal or the capture of a fugitive in cases published in this column. Rewards also will be paid for information given to Secret Witness resulting in arrests and convictions, or the capture of fugitives, in cases not published in Secret Witness.

To contact Secret Witness, telephone 438-2523 from 8 a.m. to midnight on weekdays, or from 3 to 11 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. Do not give us your name. Or write to: Secret Witness, P.O. Box 67, Long Beach, Calif. 90801 (Secret Witness How-To, with box)

This is how the last page of your "Secret Witness" letter should look after you have typed or printed your information about a crime.

Miranda doctrine said on way out

By AL EISELE
From Our National Bureau

WASHINGTON—When Ernesto Miranda died in a barroom brawl in Phoenix last week, he had no way of knowing that the landmark Supreme Court decision bearing his name also appeared to be dying.

Miranda's name was attached to one of the most controversial rulings of the court's Earl Warren era—the so-called "Miranda doctrine" that spelled out a suspect's right to remain silent in the face of police questioning.

Since the court handed down its historic ruling in 1966, law-enforcement officers have carried a "Miranda card" which they used to read to a suspect his constitutional rights before questioning him.

Miranda was carrying two of the cards when he was stabbed to death last week, and police used a "Miranda card" to inform a Mexican immigrant of his rights before arresting him in connection with the slaying.

They may not have to do that much longer if the current Supreme Court headed by Chief Justice Warren Burger continues to redefine the Miranda doctrine.

Just last month, for example, the Burger court hinted that the Miranda ruling may hamper the effectiveness of police and law-enforcement officers in carrying out their duties.

The high court ruled 6 to 2 in a Michigan case that the rights of a criminal suspect in custody are not violated by efforts of police to question him about a crime several hours after he has terminated an interrogation about a different crime by asserting his constitutional right to remain silent.

The opinion, written by Justice Potter Stewart, marked the fourth time in the past four years that a majority of the Burger court has narrowed the 1966 Miranda ruling.

This time, the court gave a narrow reading to a key sentence in the Miranda ruling with the practical result that police are now somewhat freer to carry on their interrogation of suspects.

Even though the ruling left Miranda substantially intact, two dissenting justices—William Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall—warned that the action was the forerunner of "the ultimate overruling of Miranda."

Only a week later, the court for the first time accepted a direct challenge to the Miranda ruling.

The court agreed to review a murder case in Iowa in which the defendant's murder conviction was reversed on appeal on grounds that he had been denied rights guaranteed under the Miranda doctrine.

Iowa's attorney general had asked the court to review the case and suggested that it consider, among other things, whether more "flexible" police interrogation standards should be adopted to replace those set by the Miranda ruling.

Beautification pacts

Two contracts for beautification projects, one on the Nature Center Island in El Dorado Park East and the other a center-deck project on Atherton Street, have been awarded by the Long Beach City Council.

The award for the Nature Center project was made to Moulder Brothers of Glendale in the amount of $49,837, while a $37,859 contract was awarded to Aldo's Landscaping Co., 1244 Temple Ave., to beautify Atherton between Palo Verde Avenue and Studebaker Road.

Included in the Nature Center work will be construction of walks and pavement, placing decorative rock at various locations, construction of a decorative rock wall and a redwood fence, installation of lighting and an irrigation system and planting.

The Atherton Street project will complete an improvement that started with road resurfacing and construction of median islands under a prior contract. The new contract will include installation of irrigation systems and planting of trees, shrubs and ground cover.

IP-T GRAND PRIX RACE GAME RULES — READ CAREFULLY

SAVE THESE RULES FOR HANDY REFERENCE THROUGHOUT THE CONTEST

1. The contest will consist of 13 weekly games beginning Sunday, January 4, 1976. Participants will be required to determine the finishing order of ten race cars. Official entry blanks will be published on successive Sundays for each week's contest.

Each Sunday, contestants will be given the names and numbers of 30 race cars, plus an entry form. Then, on Monday thru Friday, puzzles will appear in these newspapers which, when solved, will show which cars finished in the first thru tenth place.

TO SOLVE THE PUZZLES: Each day, Monday thru Friday, two puzzles will indicate the finishing place of two race cars, the number of letters in the cars' names, plus the correct positioning of at least one letter in each name (e.g., — — — T —). From the list of 30 cars, entrants must then properly determine the car's name that fits that particular blank. On any given day, more than one car name may fit a puzzle, but when all ten puzzles for the week are completed, there will be only one proper solution. It may be necessary at times to have the entire set of ten puzzles before the winning solution is apparent. No car's name will be used more than once in each set of weekly puzzles.

When all ten puzzles are completed, only one solution will give you the correct finishing order of the ten cars. Entrants will then place the correct car number on the cars shown on the entry form, to indicate which car finished first, second, and so on through 10th place.

2. HOW TO ENTER: Mail your completed race entry form, neatly trimmed, to: Independent Press-Telegram Grand Prix Race Game P.O. Box 420 Long Beach, CA 90801 or hand deliver your entry form, enclosed in an envelope, to the Independent Press-Telegram main offices at 604 Pine Ave., Long Beach.

IMPORTANT: Across the end of the envelope, you MUST indicate the race number you are entering as shown in the sample to the right.

Each race course entry form will show the weekly contest deadline. All entries must be in the possession of the Independent Press-Telegram on or before that date. The Independent Press-Telegram cannot be held responsible for entries delayed or lost in the mails.

Individual contestants are limited to one entry per week. Only one entry may be enclosed in an envelope.

Do not mail in the Monday thru Friday puzzles. Only mail the Sunday race entry form.

It is not necessary to subscribe to or buy the Independent Press-Telegram to enter. Contestants may make hand-drawn copies of the official race entry form to enter. These must be legible and of the same size and style as those appearing in the newspapers. Entry forms reproduced by any mechanical or photographic means will not be accepted.

3. PRIZES: Weekly Cash Awards: The Independent Press-Telegram will award twelve cash prizes of $50.00 each week. The twelve weekly cash winners will be drawn at random from the total number of correct entries received for that week's contest.

Grand Prize: The Grand Prize winner will receive a Royal Viking 14-day Alaska/Canada cruise for two aboard the Royal Viking Sea, commencing June 14, 1976. The Grand Prize drawing will be held the week following the close of the weekly contests.

All weekly winners become eligible for the Grand Prize Drawing. In addition to all weekly winners, an additional 200 correct entries will be drawn from each week's contest to be included in the Grand Prize Drawing. No notification will be made of those drawn.

No substitute prizes will be awarded. Applicable federal, state, and other taxes imposed on any prize will be the sole responsibility of the prize winner.

All prize winners will be contacted by mail. When weekly cash winners' names are published in these newspapers, they will appear on the Wednesday following each contest deadline.

4. WHO MAY ENTER: The contest is open to anyone 18 years of age or older, except employees of the Independent Press-Telegram and members of their immediate families; employees of Knight-Ridder Newspapers, Inc., any of its affiliated companies and members of their immediate families; and Independent Press-Telegram distributors, and members of their immediate families.

5. JUDGING: The decisions of the contest judges will be final in all cases. Upon entering the contest, entrants agree to abide by all rules set forth here. Entrants not conforming to all rules shall be automatically disqualified.

6. The Independent Press-Telegram reserves the right to alter the contest rules or discontinue the contest at any time.

7. NO TELEPHONE INFORMATION REGARDING THE PUZZLES WILL BE GIVEN.

TRY THIS SAMPLE PUZZLE OF THE IP-T GRAND PRIX RACE GAME

From the list of car names, determine which name fits each blank. While more than one name may appear to fit some blanks, when completed there is only one possible solution. Each name can only be used once. Not all car names will be used.

34 EAGLE	A	1st place
95 TIGER	O	2nd place
23 DOVE	V	3rd place
14 RAVEN	D	4th place
77 BOLD

Once you've determined which car finished in which place, all you must do is transfer that car's number to the entry form from the previous Sunday. The correct answers for this sample would be: 1st, Car # 34; 2nd, place, Car # 23; 3rd, place, Car # 14; 4th, place, Car # 77.

Since, EAGLE, car # 34, was first place finisher, place a 34 in the white space of the first place car.

HOW TO ADDRESS YOUR ENTRY

Your entry must be in the possession of the Independent Press-Telegram no later than the deadline shown on the entry form. It must be enclosed in an envelope addressed as the example below. YOU MUST INDICATE WHICH RACE # YOU ARE ENTERING ON THE OUTSIDE OF THE ENVELOPE.

Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra

'Offbeat' band just good fun

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

The stage looked like a second-period high school band classroom after all the choice instruments had been picked over by the kids in the first-period class.

Left behind were the instruments one would have second thoughts about.

No one ever asks you to play your tuba at parties, do they?

Undaunted, the women from The Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra scooped up the instruments and turned the rejects into a fanciful goodtime band.

"We do Scott Joplin-style ragtime," Paris Slezee said. "And...we have fun at it."

Paris Slezee (Terry Arnold), who "tickles the ivories," wanted to make it very clear that the six-woman "orchestra" is only an aside for the women in the band.

"We all have other jobs, so the band is our No. 2 priority. That's probably what's kept us together for 2½ years...we're all into other things and just do this for fun."

The Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra recently completed a sell-out gig at Long Beach City College. They're now planning their first road trip. "If we can find a truck, that is," added Sybil Rights (Carol Wood), the percussionist "drumming to the beat of a different tune."

"We've appeared at numerous benefits," she said.

"And we recently shared a stage with Lily Tomlin. I really hope we can find a truck," she said, nervously rapping her drum sticks on the side of a snare.

So who was this "Alice Stone" the band was named after?

"Alice Stone," clarinet player Clara Gnaft (Miriam Cutler) admitted, "lived sometime during the late 1800s. We're can't be too exact because she moved around a lot."

"Alice decided when she was seven that she wanted to be a timpany player. She was thwarted at every turn by a domineering mother. So she did the only thing a would-be timpany player could do... she left home."

The rest is little known history.

Other members of the orchestra, which performs delightful parodies on the Pointer Sisters — the Pointless Sisters — and threatens to come out with a big "disco" hit at anytime, include Ms. B. Haven (Terri Carson), sliding and slipping on the trombone; Mauve Ellis (Carol-Lynn Fillet), featured on first, second and third violin; and Kell Drag (Liebe Gray), showcased on tuba.

Even if the band fails to get a truck to get to its Northern California debut, The Alice Stone Ladies Society Orchestra has struck a blow for ecology.

Liebe Gray's tuba was rescued from her grandmother's garden where it was being used as a planter.

They've also brought Southland audiences a lot of goodtime fun.

Legally, it can be a mess

Living together has woes

Knight News Service

NEW YORK—Actress Cybill Shepherd said, "Living together is so much sexier than getting married." Beverly Hills housemates Michael Douglas and Brenda Vaccaro claim, "When you're married, you try harder. Who needs that kind of pressure?"

Sexy and comfortable though it may well be, increasing numbers of couples (and their lawyers) are discovering that, at least legally, living together is a mess.

In all but a few states that recognize common-law marriage, there are no laws to protect free spirits without the $3 license. Beaten or abused by her mate, a woman can't get the speedy help of a court order of protection, as a legal wife can. And, when the bliss ends, couples are unable to get the benefit of the expertise of the family court and must settle the who-gets-what in the small claims courts like a pair of business partners. Children, of course, compound the problem.

With more and more unmarried couples living together, lawyers and judges are beginning to press for action. Shouldn't the law in some way recognize their special status? Isn't a relationship—which is in every way like a legal marriage—entitled to the rights of a marriage?

Take the case of Jane and Max Scherr. In 1960, when they met, she was a wide-eyed 20-year-old political science student at the University of California and he was 42 and the owner of a San Francisco bar, Steppenwolf, a leftist hangout. A year later, she became pregnant and Max left his wife of 32 years and their four children to live with her.

Jane soon adopted Max's name. In 1965, after the birth of their second child, they started publishing the Berkeley Barb in their home. They worked hard, and in a few years the underground paper was profitable.

Unhappiness followed

success and two years ago they split. Max wanted the Barb, the bank account and the house and turned his back on any responsibility to his daughters by Jane. (After all, he was still married and sending a check home to his wife all these 14 years. He said he even slept with her from time to time.) Jane took him to court.

Their court battle is still waging in the Alameda Superior Court, but Jane already has won child support and half of the equity on their house based on the 1971 Cary case decision in which a Northern California Appeals court established that "an actual family relationship"—with cohabitation, recognition of children and fulfillment of other duties of a marriage—was as valid as a marriage in determining the right to divide common property.

Affecting the outcome of this case, hundreds like it in the California courts and matrimonial law throughout the country is the pending California Supreme Court decision on the case of actor Lee Marvin and his live-in girlfriend of six years, Michele Troila. Miss Troila is suing Marvin for half of his assets, which she estimates at $1 million. A trial court said she was entitled to the half million; the appeals court said no; so the State Supreme Court will have to make the final decision.

NEW CALCULATOR GETS BIORHYTHM

Knight News Service

The alarm jolts you out of a sound slumber. You wipe the sleep from your eyes; turn off the clock; then reach for the calculator on the nightstand.

The calculator?

That's right—a 5-by-3-inch box which, after the proper computation, displays three sets of numbers that tell you where you were two years ago, where you are now, and where you will be in the future—physically, emotionally and intellectually.

The growing cult of biorhythm freaks—who believe that those three cyclical rhythms determine your ups and downs—now have a new toy: a pocket calculator which in seconds eliminates sifting through charts and graphs for the computation. It's called the biolator.

By determining the difference between the date in question (between 1901 and 1999) and subtracting your birthdate, a simple punch of the biolator key gives you the picture. A graph above the window helps you chart the results. It also tells you on what day of the week any day falls.

JS&A Sales in Northbrook, Ill., Chicago distributor of the biolator, which retails for $29.95, reports a booming business.

The manufacturers caution that biorhythm is "merely a theory based on statistics, and it does not always apply to everybody nor apply at all times."

Believers advise using it with caution and not

"fatalistically."

But, crystal ball or not, the biolator still is an eight-digit calculator with the usual arithmetic func-

TWA pays $320,000 in crash case

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — Trans World Airlines has settled on a total of $320,000 in damages to the relatives of three passengers who died in the crash of a TWA jetliner near Upper-ville, Va., on Dec. 1, 1974.

All 92 persons aboard TWA flight 514 died when the plane slammed into the side of a Blue Ridge mountain during a heavy storm. A TWA spokesman Friday said 41 claims have been settled in that crash.

The terms of those settlements are being kept secret, either by TWA or by the U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Va., to discourage relatives or attorneys from trying to get equal or better cash awards.

However, the court orders in the settlements with three families signed last week by Fairfax County Circuit Court Judge Lewis D. Morris have been made public. They show TWA will pay $80,000 for the death of a 33-year-old FBI agent, $140,000 for the death of a retired Army brigadier general and $100,000 for the general's wife.

YOUR HOROSCOPE by JEANE DIXON

Forecast for Monday

Your birthday today: Personal liberation should be your main impetus this year as you perfect and put into motion better skills and escape from long-standing limitations. Estimates based on pyroptism must be counted, channeled into good sales pitches or used in reverse as sales-resisting maneuvers to avoid over-involvement. Relationships remain stable. Today's natives attract many friends.

Aries (March 21-April 19): The most elementary routines take more time than usual. Complex mechanical procedures are best left to professionals. Try to form new affiliations.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): Other people are preoccupied with their own thoughts. Leave them alone. Check budgets and inventories. Develop positive ideas; revise current plans promptly.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): Use a direct approach. Ask for help from those who can give it. Be on the lookout for sought-after items, especially if you travel to new places.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): Reorganize your workplace. You need a reorganization course just to settle into your regular job. If it's a new one, you must learn quickly.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): Be ready to deal with nosy questions and people who like to gossip. Keep track of expenses and related figures to prevent embarrassment or inconvenience.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Close out previously started projects or reassemble them into more efficient groups. Clear the way for larger operations. Evening promises interesting introductions.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have to move on the basis of estimates and untried methods. You have plenty of company, but no one says very much. Common sense pulls you through.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Analyze the situation, then check with an older hand to see what he thinks of your suggested solution. Adopt proposals of subordinates.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Much depends upon your initiative, ability to communicate and understanding of your role and that of others. Try to say little and do a lot.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Practice patience as everyone else goes in circles. Those nearby are curious and insist on nothing less than the full story.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If you don't share secrets, your knowledge takes on tremendous importance in others' minds. Ignore wishful thinking and follow wisdom, rather than whim.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): It's easier to swap something than to sell it. Decide how you dispose of the trade before you accept it. Clear your calendar of pending business.

New Italy sex symbol is a 'monster' success

By EARL WILSON
NEW YORK — The new Italian sex symbol Giancarlo Giannini, who is also the new Italian monster, came to the columnist's apartment for the interview. What would the new Italian sex symbol have to drink? Vodka, scotch, champagne, vino?

"Water," said a young lady interpreter who leaped out every three or four words to translate. Our schnauzer Katie leaped into his lap. "I have never been so attacked," he smiled, before the interpreter could tell us.

Giancarlo, the much-emblazoned star of the new Lina Wertmuller picture "Seven Beauties," is 33, but looks several years older. He is a Leo, father of two sons and a very serious actor seemingly without pretension, who is being compared with Marcello Mastroianni — and favorably.

"I don't think I am like him; we are very different, but I like to be compared to him as an actor," said Giancarlo.

"We did a film together; we were four months together. It was called 'The Pizza Triangle,' " Giancarlo said. "I was a pizza-maker." For the first time he seemed animated. "Is not so hard to make a pizza," he said.

"In the picture I made my woman a pizza in the shape of a heart!"

It was when Giancarlo was only 26. Was Mastroianni helpful?

"Si. He invited me to his house to eat pasta e fagioli. However, I was timid and didn't go. It showed me he was someone like everybody else. Later we went to eat, drink and laugh together." Giancarlo didn't pry into Marcello's extramarital love life or indulge in any gossip about him. Giancarlo plays "the monster of Naples" in "Seven Beauties," murders his sister's pimp and mails pieces of his body all over Italy. In view of these adventures in his films, the Giannini fans and interviewers tell him, "You really have a normal life."

"Unfortunately, yes," he says, his sense of humor coming through.

"Unfortunately?"

"Yes. What about all the things that are hidden from me? My life is a little bit longer, and perhaps some day I will no longer say 'unfortunately.' " Perhaps he will no longer say he is normal.

cent), and Adriano, 4 (Adriano).

"Giancarlo is the only one who nobody ever heard of," he said.

Giancarlo next comes before the public in D'Annunzio's "The Innocent," playing the count, again a monster. "What is better for an actor than playing a monster?" he asked.

Nevertheless, he said, another role occurs to him that would be good for an actor. "He starts out as a child as Jesus, then becomes Hamlet in middle life and grows old and becomes Santa Claus!"

THE WEEKEND WINDUP

Warren Beatty and Michelle Phillips split. She figures he's had enough time to propose, if he was gonna ... Peter O'Toole (now in "Man Friday") has ruled out TV — but not positively: "Who knows — maybe in a few years I'll be selling dog food on the blasted thing."

Tom Jones, who starts a concert tour of South Africa this week, had his Rolls-Royce flown there from L.A. ... Columbia Pictures will film the adventure book "Ghostboat" (paperbacked by Dell).

Jose Ferrer, who played one role on his knees ("Moulin Rouge"), plays his entire role on his back in "The Big Bus" ... Female impressionist Jim Bailey said he's negotiating to buy Cher's lavish L.A. home.

Disneyland will offer the sounds of Freddy Martin and his orchestra nightly from Friday to next Sunday. The performance will be a salute to the birthdays of Presidents Washington and Lincoln.

EARL'S PEARLS

TODAY'S BEST LAUGH: Victor Borge says his full name is Robert Charles Albert Victor Borge, "but I got tired of calling myself R.C.A. Victor."

WISH I'D SAID THAT: The precision-dancing Rockettes will work at Harrah's Lake Tahoe, and someone wondered what they're like. "They are," said Max Morath, "like each other."

REMEMBERED QUOTE: Will Rogers said it: "A comedian can last only until he either takes himself seriously or his audience takes him serious."

EARL'S PEARLS: Veteran actor Willard Hyde-White was asked how he felt about late-arriving theatergoers. He said, "I'd much rather they walk in late than walk out early."

'Exquisite' in 'Gravity' Hepburn a 'gutsy lady'

By SHIRLEY EDER
Knight News Service

NEW YORK—Katharine Hepburn not only transcends the confusing story and dialog given her in "A Matter of Gravity," but she also gives one of the most exquisite performances of her stage career. What's more, she is a very gutsy lady.

I don't know another important female name in show business who could have kept "A Matter of Gravity," by Enid Bagnold, open on Broadway after the first couple of weeks. My bet is that Miss Hepburn will make it a box office hit and keep it going for as long as she wants to perform in it. From the beginning she has said she'd do it for only a limited run.

Opening night brought out a lot of notables. Among them were Joan Fontaine, Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn. Hume now has a small beard. When I asked if he had grown it for a new part, Jessica replied, "No, he grew it for me, because I love Hume with a beard."

Ellen Burstyn and Carol Channing stood and cheered Miss Hepburn along with all of us in that jam-packed theater on opening night. After about the sixth curtain call, Miss Hepburn stepped forward to praise Enid Bagnold and Noel Willman, the director. I whispered to David Merriek sitting in the next seat that it would be more fitting for the author and the director to render a "thank you" speech to Miss Hepburn. Merriek, whom I secretly call "Mr. Mustache," agreed.

SHIRLEYBRITIES: Katharine Hepburn is a fresh air find. Anyone who has worked with her on a stage knows this. Most of the cast with her in the musical "Coco" nearly froze to death the winter she played it on Broadway. She insisted the stage door and exits be left open during performances.

Well, sir, for this new play Kate will have her very own air. The dressing rooms backstage in most New York theaters are windowless. Actors, over the years, have objected, but to no avail. The heartless theater owners turn deaf ears to anything that means money out of pocket.

Surely Kate Hepburn must be the most bankable star in the legit theater. Why do I say that? Because the Shubert organization, which is not known as the last of the big spenders among theatrical landlords, not only had a window installed in Miss Hepburn's dressing room, but also had to break through a brick wall so that it would open to the outside.

PRATTLE-TATTLE: Sardi's was so crowded after the Hepburn opening that Vincent Sardi called other restaurants to reserve tables for his overflow. Ellen Burstyn said at Sardi's her next picture will be called "Providence." She said Dirk Bogard and John Gielgud would also star in it.

KATHARINE HEPBURN

Up-With-People Fling

Members of Up With People cast put on free entertainment for crowds at Cerritos Shopping Center last week. It was one of several preview performances before the group's appearance today at 3 p.m. at the Long Beach Arena. Tickets, priced at $1.50, $2.50 and $3.50 will be available at the Arena box office prior to showtime.

Janis Ian all business

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

Janis Ian writes songs woven with tenuous fibers of truth.

Her bittersweet compositions, "At Seventeen" — "To those of us who knew the pain of Valentines that never came..." — provided the overtones and moody quality to her opening night concert at the Roxy in Hollywood Thursday.

Seemingly nervous and almost ill at ease on stage, it was all business for Ms.

Ian. She leaves no room for doubt about who she is. Her songs reflect her own life-style. Her lyrics are made of the stuff that sends shivers down your neck.

The words are as much an intensive and personal look into Janis Ian as they are into members of her audience.

Most of us can identify with "Valentines that never came" and with the pain of growing up questioning society's values.

It was just such a search that launched Janis Ian on her career in 1964 with a fluke hit, "Society's Child."

Her current lyrics smack of sadness and individual experiences of pain. They're not "fun" to listen to and they're not disco music.

WITNESS THE GREATEST NAVAL ENCOUNTER SINCE 1975

THE FOURTH ANNUAL GREAT BUDWEISER® CANOE RACE.

HEAR THE PITTER-PATTER OF PLUNGING PADDLES.

Come witness the wetness as Budweiser presents the Fourth Annual Great Canoe Race at Busch Gardens.

For five days (February 12-16), you'll be able to saturate yourself in what has come to be called the greatest condensation of contemporary culture.

Students from U.S.C., U.C.L.A., The University of Maryland and M.I.T. will paddle it out in a 72-hour marathon which will carry them through the hazardous and twisting waterways of an otherwise placid Busch Gardens lagoon.

You'll witness strokes of genius in this heated contest of collegians as they attempt to paddle their way into the record books. For the record, U.S.C. covered 324 miles in this three-day marathon in 1973—averaging an incredible six knots. (This is not the speed they obtained, but the number of knots in their muscles.)

Thursday, February 12, from 10 till noon is Press Day. Star athletes from U.C.L.A. and U.S.C. will race with sports-writers to warm up for the following day's great race.

Opening splash is at noon on Friday the 13th. Bud Man will be there to start the race with his trusty water gun, along with the U.C.L.A. pep band. The race will continue into St. Valentine's Day (the park will open its heart by staying open till 9), and will end at noon on Monday, Washington's Birthday (and, we might add, a well-timed salute to his crossing the Delaware).

As soon as the winners are fished out of the water, Bud Man will have the dubious distinction of presenting them with the coveted Walter Q. Piddling Paddle Award.

On top of all this excitement, the Budweiser Hot-Air Balloon will be flying above throughout the entire spectacle.

THE WATERLOGGED HISTORY OF THIS SATURATED EVENT.

DIFFERENT STROKES FOR DIFFERENT FOLKS.

Of course, you can always drown yourself in all the regular rides and attractions at Busch Gardens. This year the theme of the park is "The Good Old Days," the focus of which is the re-creation of Old St. Louis, featuring plenty of good old-fashioned amusement. It's a perfect way to celebrate our great country's Bicentennial.

There are some new added attractions for this special five-day weekend, too. Fine antique roadsters will be on display. Roto (a three-ring circus of comedy, music, and brass) will be there. Plus a roving quartet, a wandering banjo player and a ragtime piano player, all to lighten the heart.

And, to make sure you have plenty of energy to enjoy all this fun and excitement, Busch Gardens offers plenty of refreshments, including honey-dipped fried chicken with steak-size french fries. Giant hoagie sandwiches. Or beer-basted ribs. All to revitalize your body.

General admission is $4.75 ($4.25 with college I.D.) for adults. $3.75 for children 4-11. Children under 4, free. Should you want to spend two days at Busch Gardens without having to spend the money for two tickets, we're offering a special two-day T-Shirt Ticket for $7.00 which can either be worn or shown at the gate.

So come and enjoy this great amphibian amphitheatre of events at Busch Gardens.

Views differ on role of money in education

By BOB ANDREW
Staff Writer

How important is money to your child's education?

A Los Angeles teachers' union and a school-district official drew somewhat different conclusions from statistics published in the union newspaper.

United Teacher, the official organ of the United Teachers of Los Angeles (UTLA), ranked all 436 elementary schools in the Los Angeles system according to the poverty level of their students and then matched this list with reading and math test scores for each school.

The overwhelming impact of money on achievement, the article said. "If a child is in an affluent home, he comes to school with a much better chance of being ready to learn. The poorer the household, the less the chance of readiness to learn."

But Dr. John Wright, director of research and evaluation for the Los Angeles Unified School District, doesn't entirely agree.

"Money itself doesn't matter so much, but what you do with it and the conditions surrounding money," he said recently. He believes a child from a wealthy home can be poorer educationally than one from an inner-city ghetto.

Wright said the statistics are not normally kept in the form printed by UTLA. Instead the UTLA article mixes data normally compiled separately for divergent purposes.

"All we did is push the right buttons on the computer when they asked us for the information," Wright said.

The poverty indicator is the order in which schools are ranked for eligibility for federal "Title I" funds intended to help equalize educational opportunity for all youngsters regardless of their backgrounds.

It is based on four factors: average annual income of families living within the school's attendance boundaries (which is also listed as a separate column entry) as shown in the 1970 census; the number of families receiving assistance under the AFDC (aid to families with dependent children) program; the number of children who qualify for the free breakfast program; and the educational level of the youngsters' parents.

The columns headed "Reading" and "Math" are the 1975 percentile ranking of sixth-graders at the school on national standardized tests in those subjects.

"We (the district) don't make any attempt to relate the test scores to the Title I ranking," Wright said. "It just tells us which schools will be the last to be cut off in the event of a cutback in Title I funds."

Regardless of how the district uses the data, the UTLA article observes that "As one reads the family income figures from poorer to richer schools, the rise in achievement scores in reading and math goes right along with the rise in income."

The article contends that "the one thing that a family has to offer a child is personal attention — the thing that a poor family is often unable to provide."

While Wright agrees that personal interest is a prime factor in educational development, he doesn't view it as the private stock of upper-income levels.

For instance, he said, the mother in a high-income home may be so involved in outside activities that she spends less time with her child than a poverty mother who must work long hours to provide for her family.

The UTLA article sees money as the supreme factor in a child's readiness to learn.

"There are a host of other factors influencing achievement," it acknowledges, "though none apparently as much as money. We are only vaguely aware of many of those other factors. For example, the number of generations a family has been middle class may be an important factor. The number of apartment dwellers may be another."

More important than money, in Wright's opinion, is the type of activity taking place in the home.

"A child who sees his parents reading — or who is read to — is going to develop faster than one who is allowed to spend all of his time with television," Wright said.

But such items as books and magazines need not be purchased so long as public facilities such as libraries and museums are well-used.

The school district tries to schedule extra field trips to such

New Mattel doll will be X-rated toy

Baby Brother not your average toy

By DENISE KUSEL
Staff Writer

It's show and tell time at Mattel.

They loved it in Cleveland. Raved about it in Detroit. Thought it was far out in Los Angeles. And they didn't ban it in Boston.

Baby Brother — the Mattel Toy Company's newest answer to realism — is scheduled to blitz toy stores in early April.

And if the opinions of the 800 people polled in the four test cities are correct, the American children are ready for an "anatomically correct" baby boy doll.

Anatomically correct is just a fancy way of saying the dolls will have male genitals.

"It's just part of nature," said Tom Kalinske, director of product planning, design and marketing for the Hawthorne toy firm.

The kids we've used as a test group to play with the doll (all toys are tested with volunteer children before being placed on the market) were not impressed with the doll's "correctness." They just played with it like they would any other doll.

Baby Brother is Kalinske's idea. His co-workers tease the shaggy-haired youthful marketing director by calling the doll "Kalinske's baby."

"I didn't really originate the idea," Kalinske said with a shy smile. "How can you originate something that began with nature?"

"Our marketing survey showed Americans are ready for a 'correct' boy doll and we just want to be the first on the market."

A similar doll was marketed by another toy company in 1967. It flopped.

Kalinske said Baby Brother has been on the drawing boards for about six weeks. Formal plans were drawn up in July and the doll is expected to be in toy stores by April.

Baby Brother is part of the "Tender Love" series of dolls. It will be available in both black and white, has no moving parts, wets when given a drink of water and will sell for about $13.

Toys are a $4½-billion industry, with the average American child receiving about $60 worth of toys a year," Kalinske said. "Dolls account for 15 per cent of the toy market."

"We're into an age of realism and honesty. The toy market is a microcosm of society... we reflect trends. Obviously Baby Brother isn't going to be for everyone," Kalinske said. "We're going to advertise it as a 'correct baby boy doll' and it will be shown nude on the outside of the package. It will also be packed nude (Baby Brother comes with a set of short pants and a polo shirt).

MATTEL'S TOM KALINSKE AND 'BABY BROTHER'

Baby Brother is aimed at children 2 to 6 years old.

Skipper, the doll that matures when you twist her arm (her waist slims and she develops breasts) was introduced about this time last year and, according to Kalinske, "one million kids had a Skipper doll by Christmas." They're hoping for the same success and acceptance for Baby Brother.

Chances of Barbie and Ken, two of Mattel's most famous doll personalities, becoming "anatomically correct" are "slim to none."

"It just wouldn't fit in the play pattern kids assign to dolls," Kalinske said, quickly dropping the matter.

No one at Mattel is applauding yet. The success and acceptance of Baby Brother won't be known until July.

Meanwhile, the tight web of security (it's harder to get into a toy factory than a defense plant) clings to the Mattel think tank.

Employees walk silently through the brightly painted halls with plastic identification cards pinned to their shirts.

The toy industry is very competitive. It costs about $100,000 to put a new doll on the market.

And that's not play money.

Liability insurance also problem in other fields

By MOLLY BURRELL
Staff Writer

"With many problems there are no solutions—only intelligent choices, and they require trade-offs."

—Dr. Roger Slater, 1976

"Medical malpractice liability is only one part of a major problem that affects everyone who drives a car, owns a home or a business, or is in municipal government: the increasing incidence of liability litigation."

"Insurance underwriters and bankers are predicting that public liability will be uninsurable within the next five to 10 years because it will be prohibitively expensive."

Long Beach neurosurgeon Dr. Roger Slater advanced this thesis this week after the end of the Southland doctors' slowdown and after six months of study of the problems in the malpractice-insurance issue.

He cites climbing liability insurance costs in the public sector to back his thesis and also explains what he feels are the reasons for the increased number of medical malpractice suits in recent years.

"In the last 20 years there is a firmer base for treatment than in the whole history of medicine because of the development of antibiotics, vaccines and new surgical techniques."

"There are also more malpractice cases filed than ever before. This is ironic and incongruous, and the reason is this: the unrealistic expectations, disappointments and frustrations that are embodied in litigation. And the motive for litigation is money."

"It's as though 'miracle drugs' and fantastic new methods of treatment should automatically ensure miracle recoveries," he says.

Add to this the fact that America is the only nation that allows contingency fees for attorneys handling malpractice suits (In England the loser pays all, and in Canada none are allowed.)

Nine out of ten malpractice suits are settled out of court, most for less than $20,000, he says. Of the 10 per cent that reach court, he cites statistic from Jury Verdicts magazine:

In 1973, 81 out of every 100 jury verdicts favored doctors; in 1974, 102 of every 149 were in their favor, and last year 74 of every 95 favored them.

Expenses involved in a typical $30,000 jury malpractice verdict, according to the National Commission on Medical Liability Insurance, amount to $15,900 for attorneys (plaintiff and defense), $9,300 in insurance company costs (paper work, investigation, return on investment) and only $4,800 to the patient who really needs it. Under terms of the bill introduced by Assemblyman Barry Keene, D-Humboldt, an attorney gets $20,000 of a $50,000 judgment, $36,666 of a $100,000 judgment, $61,666 of a $200,000 judgment and $91,666 of a $500,000 judgment.

Slater assembled these among a welter of other statistics after he became chairman of the medical liability insurance action committee at Memorial Hospital Medical Center several months before the crisis came to a head in the Southland.

"I volunteered—a thing you should never do—and it's been a liberal education," he says. Since then he has made trips to Sacramento and elsewhere in the state testifying at hearings, conversing with legislators, researching and compiling information.

The more he studied, he said, the more he ran into people in other walks of life with the same story on the liability issue. "I have a friend who supplies heavy equipment for state freeway construction. His liability this year is $400,000. An acquaintance who owns a couple of service stations is paying $19,000. I hear that the unified school district liability has gone to $800,000 and that the city of Long Beach's liability insurance has risen dramatically."

People Talk

F.C. Anderson

RIP CHILDERS is in his late 20s. He lives in the central district of Long Beach, attends an automotive trade school and reports to a state parole officer who regards him as a good bet not to return to Soledad or any other prison.

In the vernacular, Rip Childers (not his real name) is making it. His head's on as straight as the path he walks on the outside of prison. He's a proud man; he doesn't ask any favors of the society that put him away for forgery. All he wants is the chance to prove himself.

Rip Childers has the physique of a light-heavy-weight boxer, the hands of an artist and the soul of a poet. I think he can be a major poet, that society can be enriched by the muse Rip Childers found behind bars.

In company with Rip's parole officer, I read his poetry one afternoon in December. We were deeply impressed by the man the lines revealed. The poems dealt with the best uses of freedom; they sang of love, compassion, honest emotion free of syrup and cloying sentimentality; they depicted a man raising the sights of his hope one small click at a time.

The words expressed modest goals and were devoid of any trace of self-pity. In a sense, the poems were a diary of a man coming to terms with his past, his present and his future. Wisdom, like freedom, is a hard-bought thing—and Rip Childers had paid a heavy price for it.

I thought a lot about Rip Childers while on my vacation. When Soledad hove into view along Highway 101 I thought of the spirit of a man that had come through those walls long before he did. I knew that neither the spirit nor the man would ever go back inside.

As I reflected on a man named Rip Childers, I determined to do something for him. He needs a typewriter, and I'm scouting around for one to give to his parole officer for delivery to him. Rip's well worth the investment if I'm any judge of character and potential.

I can't think of any better way to start a new year than giving a man like Rip Childers a helping hand.

MAUDE Carder Servies, who lives in San Gabriel Valley and is 86 years old, is a reader after my own heart. It seems she and I have the same journalistic hero, Ernie Pyle.

Ernie, the best friend the G.I. ever had, was killed in the Pacific late in World War II. But his work is like an eternal flame, still shining out of the pages of anthologies, still human and real and warm to the spirit and the eye.

Mrs. Servies met Ernie in Indiana in 1920 when he was a cub reporter covering a church dedication for a local newspaper. She followed his career closely thereafter, and his columns had places of honor in her scrapbook.

I never met Ernie Pyle, a fellow Hoosier, but I did inherit his old typewriter when I was on the staff of the now-defunct Indianapolis Times. The paper was owned by Scripps-Howard, a publisher that never threw anything away—with the possible exception of reporters and deskmen crass enough to ask for a $3 raise.

Ernie's old high-rise Underwood served me well for four years, even though it was wont to chew up ribbons in short order. It was in the replacement of the ribbons that I truly became an ink-stained wretch.

While I was running through my trove of Ernie Pyle memories, Mrs. Benton Walker of Lakewood called with more material. A few days later she sent along a clipping from the July 1975 issue of the Hoosier Legionnaire, which told about the American Legion's plans to restore Ernie's Dana, Ind., home as a permanent state memorial.

THE PYLE birthplace is to become a state memorial through action of the Indiana General Assembly and will be registered as a National Historic Landmark.

Ernie's home was built in 1850 and has been vacant since 1963. For years it sat on a farm down the way from Dana, nearly inaccessible to all save vandals. Last autumn, however, the Legion moved the old house into Dana, where situated on a corner lot it can be repaired, maintained and protected by the townspeople Ernie Pyle loved and wrote about so often.

There was a time when Ernie was buried beneath a lonely monument on Je Shima, the godforsaken island where a sniper's bullet killed him on April 18, 1945. But he's nearer home now, his resting place Crater National Cemetery in Hawaii. As for his spit, I don't think it ever left Dana, no matter how far he roamed.

I came into newspapering by the light of Ernie Pyle's star, and I follow it still as best I can.

Will nuclear power debate get to real issue?

SACRAMENTO — Only about 120 days remain for California's voters to make up their minds about nuclear energy, and that means the tempo of the pro and con campaigns on Proposition 13 will be speeding up.

What a speeded-up tempo means, unfortunately, is a probable increase in the rhetoric, sloganeering and hurling of charges and counter-charges.

It might be appropriate, then, to take a look at what will appear on the ballot when voters go to the polls June 8.

The official summary will read as follows:

"After one year, would prohibit nuclear power plant construction and the operation of existing plants at more than 60 per cent of original licensed core power level unless federal liability limits are removed. After 5 years, would require the derating of existing plants by 10 per cent per year unless the legislature, by 75 vote, has confirmed the effectiveness of safety systems and waste disposal methods. Permit small-scale medical or experimental nuclear reactors."

The voter will have, beforehand, the complete language of the proposed law.

Bob Schmidt

View From Our State Bureau

plus arguments in its behalf by Harold Urey, Nobel laureate in physics and professor emeritus at the University of California, San Diego; John Knezevich, president of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1969, AFL-CIO; and Kent Gill, president of the Sierra Club.

Arguing against the measure in the ballot pamphlet will be Dr. Robert Hof-stadler, Nobel laureate in physics, Stanford University; Dr. Ruth Yaffe, professor of chemistry, San Jose State University; and Dr. Jack Edward McKee, professor of environmental engineering at the California Institute of Technology.

In addition, the staff of the Assembly Committee on Resources, Land Use and Energy is preparing a summary of the 15 hearings it held on the initiative.

Voters will settle the question of which campaign was the most persuasive but at this point it appears that the intense amateurs promoting the initiative have given a pretty thorough public relations drubbing to the professionals representing the utilities, manufacturers, and federal agencies opposed to the measure.

As an example, practically everyone who talks about the proposed law, including many of its opponents, refers to it as the "Nuclear Safeguards Initiative." Its proper title is "Nuclear Power Plants Initiative."

It took awhile for the initiative's opponents to realize what had happened, but by that time the use of the substituted title had become general. The substitution was accomplished with a subtlety which appears to belie the initiative promoters' self-proclaimed lack of professionalism.

There will undoubtedly be considerably divided comment on last week's resignation by three General Electric executives and their warnings about nuclear energy, but the announcement was orchestrated with a public relations sophistication of undeniable quality.

So the initiative's opponents know by now that they have a major selling job to do. Their campaign seems to be developing along two lines.

One: The initiative is unconstitutional because the subject of nuclear safeguards has been pre-empted by the federal government.

Two: No nuclear energy means California's choices are between insufficient electricity and a dangerous reliance on dwindling and environmentally destructive fossil fuels.

Both lines may be valid, and one of both may decide the vote.

But it is to be hoped that the large issue — nuclear energy itself — will be examined. The subject has never been examined in a public forum as large as the one provided by the initiative, and the opportunity should not be wasted.

Thirty years ago the federal government opted to pour billions and billions of taxpayers' dollars into the development of nuclear energy. That decision, and the related decision to ignore, for all practical purposes, the development of other energy sources such as solar or wind or tidal or geothermal or whatever, should be justified.

It is important, because if the initiative fails, either because of the vote of a court ruling, California's energy future will be determined by the government apparatus which made that original decision.

B-2 LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA, SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1976

Editorials

Welcome, neighbor

Both Norris Industries and a good many Long Beach people who worked hard to help the international industrial giant to locate its corporate headquarters in our city are entitled to congratulations.

Norris Industries has made the decision, purchased 4.3 acres in the West Beach Redevelopment Area, and will soon call Long Beach home.

NORRIS MANUFACTURES building, industrial, automotive and defense products in 28 plants throughout the world. The headquarters for these plants, which employ 10,000 persons, will be in a building that will go up in the next year or so at the southwest corner of Ocean Boulevard and Golden Shore.

Kenneth Norris Jr., the company's board chairman, said a year ago that the decision to move to Long Beach was made after a real estate company searched Southern California for a centrally located site close to other key commercial and financial institutions and with easy access to freeways and airports.

We're happy that Norris selected Long Beach. We trust the move will be good for the company and the 50 to 100 key people who will direct its operations from the Long Beach headquarters.

THE MOVE WILL be good for Long Beach, too, we think.

"This is an extremely significant industrial development in the history of Long Beach," Mayor Thomas J. Clark said at the ceremony in which Norris signed an agreement to pay $1.5 million for the building site.

The significance is not only in the presence of Norris Industries, which is important in itself, but also in the impetus it will give the search for other new industry for our city, and the impetus for expansion of existing Long Beach industries.

Norris Industries and other companies, large and small, that come to Long Beach will find this a friendly community with good schools and good government as well as one with obvious advantages in location and climate.

We look forward to having the Norris Industries people among us. And we trust that the Economic Development Corp., the non-profit company that worked to bring them here, will have more success stories soon.

Of minimal interest

The new thing in art, we gather from an article by dance critic Deborah Jowitt in New York's Village Voice, is minimalism.

The unsophisticated might call it monotony.

MRS. JOWITT'S main example is a dance by Kathy Duncan. As the dancer's husband, composer Tom Johnson, plays "deep, violent chords" on the piano, Miss Duncan "stands in a white silk dress with a bright light trained on her."

At some point — "maybe after 54 chords" — Miss Duncan falls. The piano stops. Miss Duncan gets up slowly. The chords resume. She stands for awhile. Then she falls again.

IN SPITE of the song, life probably was never just a bowl of cherries, but it would have been a lot simpler than worrying about roses, oranges, cotton, bluebonnets, fiestas and such.

FARM YOUNGSTERS are reminded they don't have to go to the big city to be a success at any profession, unless their goal is to be an urban guerrilla.

Occasionally, for variety perhaps, she "races to one corner, then tiptoes smoothly backward on the same diagonal, making odd little curving gestures close to her face."

Mrs. Jowitt said this solo — called "Outside" — is not quite in "the mainstream of minimalism" because it uses "recognizable dance motifs" rather than "everyday movement." Mrs. Jowitt apparently has not been reading the stories about President Ford.

"I keep wondering," the critic commented, "why this is more interesting to talk about and to think about than it was to watch."

IT IS THIS ability to be puzzled by what would be crystal clear to the average fellow that enables a critic to appreciate minimalism, we suppose.

Someday, we suspect, New Yorkers will tire even of talking and thinking about minimalism. If the new fad then becomes maximalism, all the critics can rush over to Madison Square Garden when Ringling Brothers sets up three rings and a bandstand.

Political coverage has flaws

MANCHESTER, N.H. — Eight years ago, at about the comparable stage of the 1968 presidential campaign, the candidacy of Sen. Eugene McCarthy was considered a poor joke by most of the political press.

Only in the last week or 10 days of the primary campaign in this state did the press catch on to the fact that the hordes

Tom Wicker

New York Times News Service

of young McCarthy volunteers were shaping a real challenge to President Johnson. And when McCarthy won 42 per cent of the vote here, the impact of his achievement was roughly doubled by the fact of the press's earlier neglect; a major upset appeared to have been scored, when all along the press had underestimated the strength of a campaign that could add antiwar fervor to anti-Johnson sentiment, and support both with ample manpower and a candidate on the scene.

THAT SAME year, George Romney of Michigan arrived in New Hampshire still the front runner for the Republican nomination despite a growing belief in the political press that he was inept, unable to handle tough questions and not of presidential calibre — whatever that is.

As the New Hampshire campaign progressed, press doubts about Romney mushroomed, and he slumped in the polls; before the votes were cast in this state he withdrew — unquestionably a victim, to a large extent, of the picture the press had painted of a dunce-cap candidate with his foot in his mouth.

What was the difference? Why did press disdain — and in some cases outright hostility — fail to destroy the McCarthy candidacy, while press disdain — and in some cases, open contempt — virtually ruined the Romney campaign?

THE ANSWER seems clear. The McCarthy effort was based on genuine popular support, for an idea and for a man who had had the courage to run against the odds. Press reaction could not outweigh that basic fact, but it could and did have profound effect on George Romney — who did, in many ways, fail the test of national campaigning and who had no fundamental support, independent of his performance, to carry him through.

The history of recent "media effects" ought to be borne in mind as the 1976 campaign moves along. The press — television most certainly included — inevitably reflects in its articles and broadcasts the perceptions (however arrived at) of the people who write and produce them. Their perceptions tend to be remarkably similar, since these men and women influence each other as well as the public; and these perceptions also can be wrong. Both the hard instinct and the universal human tendency to prepare for the last war are prime reasons; venality, bias and conspiracy usually are not.

Already the process can be seen at work this year:

— Jimmy Carter of Florida clearly has been promoted by the political press as the "surprise" of the campaign so far. Carter's "good press" may have helped this become a truth; but paradoxically, if he does not do as well in Florida as the press perception suggests he will do, his campaign could be badly damaged.

— The press has spread the idea that Fred Harris, with his radical economic program, can't win, even though he obviously has substantial support. This almost certainly hurts Harris; but if he should win or do well in the early primaries, he would be helped by the "upset" effect.

— Most reports on George Wallace, despite routine caveats about his health, see him as the smashing vote getter of 1968 and 1972, a perception yet to be substantiated in 1976.

And beware, readers and viewers, of any story low-rating a candidate for inept "press arrangements." Hell hath no fury like a reporter whose baggage has been left in Berlin, N.H., or anywhere else, for that matter. Even such minor concerns can influence the perceptions of political reporters. Press perceptions and their impact on public judgment, in fact, is a subject well worth other articles as the campaign unfolds.

"I'M BEGINNING TO SUSPECT AN ASSASSINATION PLOT..."

Bicentennial snake oil

SCRABBLE, VA. — The mail brings a letter and a handout from a public relations outfit in Philadelphia, promoting the Declaration of Interdependence recently composed by Professor Henry Steele Commager. The letter politely suggests that I might want to prepare a commentary on this thing.

Very well, I just might. The professor's pronouncement, prepared for the World Affairs Council, is a bucket of mush. It is a mish-mash of reality and illusion, of good intentions and bad judgment. The dictionary defines the verb "to subvert" as "to undermine the morals, allegiance, or faith of; to corrupt." This is a genuinely subversive document.

COMMAGER BORROWS from Jefferson's Declaration of Independence. It is a bad loan. As a historian, the professor doubtless has learned a vast deal of the world as it was; he manifests a pathetic naivete about the world as it is.

"When in the course of history, the threat of extinction confronts mankind, it is necessary for the people of the United States to declare their interdependence with the people of all nations..." Fiddlesticks. Catastrophe, yes; extinction, no. A little less hysteria might have provided a better beginning.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident," says the professor, "that all men are created equal." It is a palpable falsehood. The professor declares "that people everywhere are entitled to the blessings of life and liberty, peace and security and the realization of their full potential." Nonsense. How did people everywhere get so entitled? Who entitled them? The American tradition teaches us that people must work for these things, that nations preserve peace by constantly preparing for war, that realizing one's "full potential" is a personal struggle. It is not something to which one is "entitled."

THE PROFESSOR goes on to say that all the peoples and the nations of the globe should acknowledge their interdependence and free themselves from the "limitations of national prejudice." We must put aside "narrow notions of national sovereignty." We must rise above "the claims of chauvinistic nationalism."

"We affirm," says the professor, "that a world without law is a world without order, and we call upon all nations to strengthen and to sustain the United Nations and its specialized agencies, and other institutions of world order, and to broaden the jurisdiction of the World Court, that these may preside over a reign of law that will not only end wars but end as well that mindless violence which ter-rorizes our society even in times of peace."

Under the Declaration of Interdependence, the resources of Earth "are the heritage of no one nation or generation, but

of all peoples, nations and posterity." The declaration demands a "more equitable sharing of these resources. 'No one nation can any longer effectively maintain its processes of production and monetary systems without recognizing the necessity for collaborative regulation by international authorities.'"

WELL, URK. The professor had the assistance of a committee of 56 philosophers in creating this work of banality. You wonder, reading it over, if the laws of gravity kept them from floating off on moonbeams. What they are proposing, in essence, is to submerge those political and moral traditions that we call "western civilization" in a barbarian sea of alien customs and ideologies. What becomes of personal freedom in a world order of one man, one vote? When all the free-loaders of the professor's world community start to vote, what "equitable" distribution of resources would result?

These babblers talk of a rule of law under the broadened jurisdiction of the World Court. Rule by whose law? Would they like the Soviet Union's law on private property? Would they prefer India's law on freedom of the press? Would they be pleased by a nice Brazilian view of habeas corpus?

To be sure, in many ways men and nations are indeed interdependent. Every idiot knows that. It goes without saying. But in many essential ways, we have been and must remain wholly independent. And it is to that proposition, if we are renewing declarations, that we ought again to pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

Hunting with a friend

WASHINGTON, D.C. — It would be possible to have more faith in the Civil Service Commission's efforts to eliminate lavish entertainment by defense and space contractors if Civil Service Chairman Robert Hampton had not been entertained by some of the same government contractors.

Hampton, whose agency sets ethical

standards for the whole government, admits that he has accepted free hospitality at a hunting lodge leased by Rockwell International "about twice a year" for the last six years.

The Civil Service Commission chairman distinguishes his own hunting forays at Rockwell's hunting lodge at Wye Island on the Chesapeake Bay from the entertainment of the high-ranking Pentagon brass who have come in for sharp criticism for duck and geese hunting at Rockwell and Northrop hunting lodges.

"The Civil Service Commission doesn't deal directly with the contractors," Hampton explains. "And I can't imagine any circumstances where Civil Service Commission officials would have a basic conflict of interest in accepting normal hospitality from defense or space contractors."

ALTHOUGH HAMPTON initially had declared that Rockwell International had no direct contract with the Civil Service Commission, he later had to amend that because one of his division chiefs called him to inform him that the Civil Service Commission had a $74,000 contract with Rockwell.

Chairman Hampton said he would not have gone duck and geese hunting at the Rockwell Lodge on Maryland's eastern shore "if it had not been for a longtime personal friendship" with one of Rockwell's officials.

"We were a part of a little hunting group that had leased our own hunting area, and that was the basis of our original friendship when he was an official of North American Aviation," Hampton said. "When North American merged with Rockwell, the Rockwell lodge became available to him for his personal use."

Hampton stressed that his friend at Rockwell "was not one of the high muckety mucks" in the company but "just another employee." He declined to name his longtime friend "and to drag him through a lot of publicity" because "he's had a personal tragedy."

CHAIRMAN Hampton said he is deeply troubled over the pattern of entertaining by defense and space contractors that has resulted in the Northrop Corp. being forced to repay the Air Force $564,013 in improper costs charged for entertaining Pentagon employees, but that the Civil Service Commission "can only lay down the ethical guidelines."

After Civil Service lays down the general ethical guidelines for all government agencies, including the Defense Department and NASA, it "approves" the ethical rules and regulations of the agencies.

"But we have no power and no personnel to investigate whether the agency heads are enforcing those standards," Hampton said. "We get into it only when there is some congressional investigation such as the current investigation."

Hampton, who has been a member of the Civil Service Commission since 1961 and chairman since 1969, said that he was "not at all sure that we should have any greater authority for enforcement of the ethical standards."

"If we had the authority we would eventually get the responsibility, and I believe that the responsibility must be on the heads of the agencies and departments," Hampton said. "If there is a need for the examination of how the ethical standards are being enforced, it can be done by Congress or by some other outside group."

HAMPTON SAID that "there has been a gradual tightening of the ethical standards over the years."

"What was perfectly acceptable as ordinary business practice suddenly is not acceptable anymore," Hampton said. "That is what happened to Northrop and Rockwell and their hunting lodges."

The Civil Service chairman discounted the idea that major defense contractors who entertained Civil Service Commission members or officials would appear to have an undue amount of influence in connection with agency reprisal action against "whistle blowers" on corruption or favoritism.

"We are not a party to the contract, and in personnel disputes we simply try to be the referee between the employee and the agency," Hampton said. "I don't see that there would be any possible conflict of interest."

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., is less complacent about the cozy defense industry relationships across the whole government.

"The problem is pressure and influence," Proxmire said. "Not overt pressure (on specific officials), but an insidious variety that stems from consciously cultivating a network of friendships and obligations through numerous favors and benefits."

It is not a mark of high ethical sensitivity when Chairman Hampton does not recognize the appearance of conflicts in his own conduct when he has gone hunting at the Rockwell hunting lodge in the company of legislators, military men and the defense contractors with whom they have done business.

Scare tactics

EDITOR:

After reading yet another article about Cherry Manor, I would like to speak out publicly against Mr. Frank Arundel's "scare tactics."

My husband and I put everything we had into buying our home here in Cherry Manor almost four years ago. As we were moving in, we were visited by Mr. Arundel, who gave us a slip of paper with a phone number on it. He instructed us to "call this number if you smell anything in the air." We learned later that the number was that of the air pollution control district.

We were also asked if we would give money and join the home owners' association, a small group that we have learned by no means represents the majority of home owners in this area. However, what this association does affects us all, whether we belong or not.

Propositions unsanitized and unwanted by residents have publicly been proposed by the chairman of this association, supposedly for the good of all concerned. Mr. Arundel as chairman complained to the Public Utilities Commission so vehemently about the railroad nearby that the PUC came out here to investigate and constantly observe for two days. In the end they gave the Union Pacific Railroad more than a clean bill of health. The Air Resources Board and the APCD and the health department have been contacted numerous times by Mr. Arundel and they also have responded with costly taxpayer-paid investigations. Again and again the results are that Mr. Arundel's charges against nearby industry were exaggerated. I object also to the volume of time and taxpayer dollars spent by the city of Long Beach in checking out Mr. Arundel's charges in behalf of the Cherry Manor Homeowners Association.

I have had asthma all my life. My condition has not worsened any after moving here and yet I have been asked to sign papers attributing my condition to the proximity of industry.

I have gone to city council meetings, public meetings where Mr. Arundel has spoken with his voice of doom. I have heard over and over that we residents will all be burned alive in our beds, will die of cancer, or suffer some other horrendous fate because industry is our close neighbor. Mr. Arundel has lived here in Cherry Manor for well over 30 years and to me he certainly appears to have suffered no ill effects.

I'm so thankful that we live in a country where freedom of speech is available to everyone, but who draws the line where Cherry Manor is concerned? Haven't we residents had enough bad publicity about our neighborhood? In our opinion the false charges and accusations against our industrial neighbors, the danger cries by a few people, have done far more damage to property values than the closeness of industry could ever do.

Bike route

EDITOR:

Thanks to the farsighted cooperation between the city councils of Long Beach and Seal Beach and to the state of California, it is now possible for one to safely ride a bicycle from Seal Beach Boulevard to the Long Beach State campus via a new bike route which parallels the San Diego and Garden Grove freeways in Seal Beach and has access to the campus in Long Beach.

With the general criticism that usually is hurled upon city council members and city employees I feel it imperative that the public be aware of one citizen's appreciation.

Persons interested in seeing the completion of a San Gabriel River bike route to Pacific Coast Highway might consider writing to appropriate state officials to enlist their support as it is essential to acquire state funding for an underpass of the San Diego Freeway.

Again, thanks to the cities of Long Beach and Seal Beach for the new bike route.

Unconscionable

EDITOR:

It would now appear that our chief county administrator, Harry Hufford, intends to arrange for a special tax override election to help the county of Los Angeles overcome a $114-million revenue shortage for 1976-77.

Is it really necessary to recover that money for Los Angeles County when actually hardly any of the supervisors made any move to actively put a stop to their reckless spending programs? One supervisor did object to the election for extra taxes. That was Pete Schabarum. He labeled the special tax election as "unconscionable."

Perhaps the county needs to operate by the same method in which private business is forced to do. The property owners need to decide if those 85,000 county employees are really that important, and must the county continue buying new buildings to house more mountains of inefficiency.

At least we can take heart in the fact that Pete Schabarum has made his position clear and wants to stop the huge tax rip-offs. Now if only those other four kings will step forward to be counted.

Horrible death

EDITOR:

After obtaining my dog license the other day, I walked around to the back of the shelter to see the animals. The sad look on their faces seemed to reflect the doom that lay ahead for them. It depressed me so, I only wish I could have taken them all home.

An elderly male worker walked by pushing a cart that is used to deliver the dogs or cats to their death. I stated to him: "It will sure be a blessing when animals don't have to be put to sleep by those horrible decompression chambers. It's such a horrible death." His reply really shocked me. He said, "I wouldn't want it any other way."

My Lord, with people like him we'll never get a law passed to abolish this terrible way to dispose of sick and unwanted animals.

I would think the revenue from all the license tags, fines, etc., would enable a more humane way, like a shot in the leg, like I had to have done with a poor old sick dog of mine.

It might take a little more time, but it would be the humane thing to do. These iron traps must be abolished or we have a very sick society.

EDITOR:

In these times of public mistrust and negative attitudes toward our elected officials, I would like to sound a positive note for my state assemblyman, Frank Vicencia, and his administrative assistant, Harvey Howard, of California's 54th Assembly District.

We own a very small nonprofit facility — the Barbara Dawson Educational Center in Downey — and operate solely on tuition money, donations and our own fund-raising programs. As you can well imagine, when our money gets caught up in the bureaucratic red tape, we stand on the brink of financial disaster. It was just such a time that Mr. Vicencia and Mr. Howard brought pressure to bear and the money started to trickle in that allowed us to meet some of our payroll and fiscal obligations.

Mr. Vicencia also has pledged to look into the possibility of upgrading state Sedgwick funds for special education, which has not been done for over eight years.

I heartily encourage all parents in the 54th Assembly District to write a note of thanks to these men who are totally interested in our children's welfare.

It would be of considerable assistance to Mr. Vicencia for all Californians "who are parents, family or friends of our very special children to contact their assemblyman or senators and encourage them to work for the benefit of our special children."

Our doctors

EDITOR:

There was a most interesting article in your paper by Bob Schmidt on Jan. 25. The article, "Anyone mention the patient?" held one statement which, in my opinion, would solve most of the problems involved in the malpractice battle.

The statement: "What if doctors, a decade or two decades or a generation ago, had made vigorous efforts to rid their profession of the incompetent and the careless?"

It seems to me that our medical men would be the best equipped to know when there are men or women in their profession who are not upholding the time-honored Hippocratic Oath. Also, if our doctors were to be a bit more frank with their patients, and would take the time to listen, I believe there would be a far greater understanding between them, which just might prevent any need for future lawsuits.

Since I have never felt that any physician was divine, or infallible, I would not expect a guarantee for any treatment. However, I do have a great respect for any person who has devoted his life to the medical profession, since I cannot believe that anyone would spend so many years for preparation in this field unless there was a sincere desire to help others. Fortunately, I have never had any physician whose ethics, in my opinion, were below standard, nor one whom I could not trust implicitly.

Councils need help

EDITOR:

In a recent letter, Frank Brejcha presented some seemingly compelling arguments in support of the L.P.T.'s strong opposition to the appointment of aides to members of the Long Beach City Council. He expressed concern that they will become cogs in a "political machine," and proposed that the city manager be permitted to run the city without "interference."

Mr. Brejcha identified himself as a long-time municipal employee, and I respect his point of view.

However, it is important, I think, to look at another viewpoint — from the unique perspective of one who has served both as staff member and council member under the same city manager.

Mr. Brejcha's theory is just that — in the best public administration tradition. Reality may be something else again.

A city council can only identify clear goals and objectives — can only make sound policy decisions — if they are given complete, undistorted, unbiased data and a selection of options supplemented with projected ramifications, costs and consequences. Anything less than that renders a council's legislative efforts ineffective at best.

A city manager has at his command the total staff and resources of city hall. The city council has only what the manager chooses to give them — unless they have the time and/or the staff for independent research and study.

If a manager and staff supply reports, either by design or inadvertence, that are less than complete in the presentation of data and alternatives; that present figures in a manner leading to distorted conclusions; that reflect the biases of the manager and/or departmental directors; that are not timely, allowing the council sufficient opportunity for digestion, evaluation and citizen input; that offer ultimatums rather than options — then the council members, no matter how earnest their intent to do the best possible job for their citizens and their community, are rendered impotent.

A city manager can and does effectively control policy by virtue of the kind of input he orchestrates.

A free democratic society is based on a system of checks and balances. There can be no checks and balances if there is only one source of input.

The city council member who has to spend 40 or more hours a week in pursuit of his or her livelihood, and who has no personal staff assistance, is precluded by sheer time strictures from the independent investigation that would afford the optimum basis for sound decision-making.

I submit that city councils need all the help they can get!

Union benefits

EDITOR:

In reply to Mr. William L. La Beau's bitter attack on organized labor, I would like to tell Mr. La Beau what a union does for its members.

I am 75 years old. I retired when I was 65, which makes 10 years; all these years I receive a check each month from my pension fund. Other benefits I am entitled to are medical, hospitalization, dental and optical. My husband is also covered by these benefits. True, I pay dues, and I have walked a picket line many times in my younger days. But for $3.50 a month where can a person get this kind of coverage?

At the present time when medical help is so expensive, I am very grateful my former employer believed in unions to protect his employees, and I thank God for all men who take a stand to help unions and stand up for them. They help the working people. What benefits do you get for right to work, and what protection?

I have been a union member over 35 years and I am proud of it.

Dealing with crime

EDITOR:

In "Penalties don't halt crime" (Feb. 2), Sydney Harris says that "harshness has always been the solution of the ignorant, whether in rearing a child or in rebuking a lawbreaker." If this is true, what we need is a lot more ignorant people, such as Los Angeles Police Chief Ed Davis.

I wonder what kind of logic Mr. Harris would use to explain why the most rapid increase in the history of violent crime has been since our judicial system was taken over by a bunch of left-wing intellectuals who believe that criminals are good people who have been victimized by society.

Spending priorities

EDITOR:

Opposition to the real estate transfer tax, the sewer tax and unnecessary spending has demonstrated how the taxpayers feel.

In the Independent of Feb. 4, comments by members of the city council and City Manager John Mansell were very informative. Mrs. Renee Simon said that inasmuch as petition signers were from all parts of the city, cutbacks should be city-wide in such things as street sweeping, tree trimming and services that affect every resident.

Does Mrs. Simon favor top priority cutbacks first? Is this intended to punish the petition signers? Is this the same old trick to raise more money for essential services and then spend the surplus on luxury items?

It is evident that a priority spending list is of the utmost importance!

My money lies over the ocean

NEW YORK — The papers hint at crateloads of dollars being flown secretly through the night. They are flown to Italy. They are flown to Japan. One imagines the barely concealed delight with which the delivery men are met, brawny Italian and Japanese piano movers knocking at the lucky door.

"Who's there?" "Air freight delivery. Where do you want these crates of dollars?"

What happy scenes in faraway lands! I read these stories with pleasure, as I read all stories about people getting rich, for I, too, lust for money and hope to unlock the secret of amassing it by studying tales of how others have turned the trick.

MY FAMILY smiles secretly behind their cereal spoons as I read these stories. They think me incapable of richness.

Listen, I tell them. Crateloads of dollars are being flown secretly through the night. To have one delivered, one has only to be an Italian general with a yearning to restore his homeland to the glorious era of Mussolini.

The details are right here in the paper. A cool $800,000 has been delivered to a single Italian general, courtesy of the United States Treasury. My family is outraged by this. They hate to see a man get rich. Especially with my money.

The CIA apparently takes the same sour-grapes attitude. It strongly opposed sending my money to the general. Fortunately for him, the American ambassador in Rome still believed in Horatio Alger, for he overruled the CIA, and the story has had its happy ending.

I NOTE the ambassador's name is Graham Martin, the same man who just last year, as ambassador to Saigon, undertook to balm the anguish of the collapsing Vietnamese government with several hundred million dollars, only to be stymied by spoilsports in Congress.

Martin figures actively in my schemes for ending up rich. When I become a right-wing general in Asia or Italy, I shall have long lunches with Martin.

The family thinks this absurd. Crates of dollars cannot be flown out of the Treasury on a mere ambassador's say-so, they argue. I shall need a friend at the White House. Henry Kissinger perhaps. How little they understand Kissinger. This Italian general has since been charged with criminal complicity in a plot to overthrow the Italian government. Kissinger is too canny to crate dollars to persons like that. He favors dumping them into forests of ob-

Trees pretty, shady and buckling walks

By ROBERT GORE
Staff Writer

Greenmeadow Road in Lakewood—if the street's residents and city staff members have their way—may stay green.

The street, particularly in the 6000 block, is lined with large, stately ash trees, making it unique in Lakewood.

However, the trees do more than look good and provide shady relief; they have created a severe problem by buckling sidewalks. Public Works Director Michael Zambory called it the worst problem in the city's 200 miles of streets.

A survey in 1974 by the Community Services Dept. found 31 homeowners wishing to save the trees, 11 against, 2 undecided and 10 that weren't home.

Based on its contact with the residents, the city has developed a two-phase plan to save the trees, according to Zambory. Earlier this year the street was resurfaced, the water main replaced and new curbs and gutters put in with a total cost of $50,800.

Because of the large roots, city crews could only root-prune one side at a time or the tree would topple over, Zambory explained.

Although the roots could be cut back on the curb side, they will have to remain on the sidewalk side.

The city is planning to install curved sidewalks. The concrete paths, Zambory said, will meander around the tree roots wherever necessary.

Within two months, the plans will be finished and another homeowners' meeting is to be called.

Residents will see the plan and be asked whether they are willing to pay for it through an assessment district. A lien could be placed on their homes if they agree to pay and then fail to do so, Zambory said.

Homeowners also will be asked to grant a 5-foot easement in their front yards for the sidewalk, Zambory said, and added that "there will be no coercion whatsoever."

James Buck, 6012 Greenmeadow Road, attended the original meeting two years ago and said the plan sounded fine with him "if it's done well and in good taste. If it's a cheap or shoddy job, I'll be disappointed."

He said "the trees are an asset to the homeowner and to the street, but they do damage the sidewalk and the street. It's a beautiful block in the summer time."

"I'm perfectly willing to give up a few feet of property," Buck said, adding that he was generally satisfied with the treatment homeowners had received from the city.

"I had a neighbor who had a puddle in her driveway for four years—she went to the city council and nobody would do anything about it," said Richard O'Dell, 6032 Greenmeadow Road.

It was her repeated trips to city hall that eventually got the project moving, he said. The woman, Mrs. S.D. Schneider, has since moved to Long Beach.

Sidewalks on the block are very unsatisfactory because of the buckling from the tree roots, O'Dell said. The work done so far by the city has been well done, he said.

Zambory said preparation of the final plans for the sidewalks have been delayed because the department has only one draftsman, who is juggling several projects at once.

Other fields face liability problem, too

"You know how your car liability insurance has risen. The same thing has happened to supermarkets, small businesses and big ones."

"Talk to any physician in this or any town and he will tell you of incidents where people who have had an accident are encouraged to go first to the attorney about a suit before they go to the doctor for treatment. Here in Long Beach it's common knowledge that some shipyard foremen get $25 when they refer an injured worker to a lawyer."

Another factor in increased medical liability litigation, he says, is the knowledge by Medi-Cal and Medicare patients that they can take their injury case to an attorney who will take it on a contingency basis—at no cost to them—and they have nothing to lose by trying to win some money.

"Take the case of the person who slips and is injured in a supermarket, and the attorney names the doctor, the market, the corporation and maybe some John Does. It costs between $750 and $1,000 just to investigate even if the patient never went to the hospital," he says.

So what does it all mean?

Says Slater: "The whole liability problem needs intensive study, and the governor is aware of it. He's aware of the need for tort reform in all civil actions. He said last month that the tort system has become a set of incentives that is counterproductive."

So how does this, or can this happen?

"Education...informing the people...pressure on a Legislature full of lawyers..." he starts to tick off some answers.

As far as the medical malpractice liability problem is concerned, he sees no immediate help until tort reform is codified and no probability of that in this session of the Legislature.

However, he says, a temporary choice is the bill introduced by State Sen. Alfred Song, D-Los Angeles, which would provide insurance at reasonable rates and the time to work out revision of the tort system—especially removal of malpractice cases from the courts to an arbitration board composed of physicians, attorneys and laymen.

This type of binding arbitration—with right of appeal—was enacted into law in Pennsylvania and Michigan last year, he says. Pennsylvania also regulates attorney fees and allows the state medical board to hire its own investigators.

The California Medical Quality Assurance board must use investigators from the Department of Consumer Affairs—who may or may not be qualified in medical matters. In Indiana there is a top of $100,000 liability on physicians and a panel to screen cases before they get to court.

All these add up to reductions in incidence of litigation, he explains, and thus a lessened insurance cost.

But what about the issue of doctors policing their own profession, weeding out the "bad apples?"

"Hospital review committees have done this for years, but the censured physician frequently goes to court to sue the committee members. Costs of defending themselves have made committee members reluctant to exercise their disciplinary duties," he says.

Also, hospital legal counsels frequently advise hospital boards to go slow in disciplinary activity to avoid suits and countersuits, he says.

In addition, he cites a national investigation of disciplinary activity showing that, in California, where there are some 33,000 licensed physicians, there were 184 actions taken against them in a five year period. There were 140 taken in the next five most populous states with a total of 104,000 physicians.

"There is discipline, but it's not the 'bad apples' that have brought on the malpractice crisis," he says. "The costs of investigating and defending non-meritorious claims is a major factor. And the fact that juries do not have the background necessary for technical evaluation of the cases—complex matters that mean the distinction between malpractice and unfavorable or unexpected result."

"Indeed," he continues, "the present definition of malpractice—'malicious and/or negligent act of omission or commission in the delivery of health care'—should be expanded to include: 'as distinguished from an unfavorable or unexpected result inherent in the disease process being treated or the therapy being applied.'" cultural facilities for those schools with high Title I priorities.

"Even so," he said, "we can never bring those children up to the same level as those in a family that takes the kids periodically to a museum or art gallery for the day."

Both Wright and the writer of the UTLA article are concerned that the public may draw incorrect conclusions from the published data, especially since the test scores are based on one grade for one year which may not be typical of a school's record over a longer period.

"It is a fallacy to draw any specific conclusions from the chart scores other than the gross generalization that money affects achievement favorably," warns the article.

Even when additional conclusions highly flatter the district, Wright politely turns them aside.

He was asked about the school with the third-lowest income level (111th Street), which seems to be an island of achievement in a sea of despair. Its children scored 42 in reading and 28 in math, compared with scores of 7 to 9 and 14 to 15 for the two preceding schools and 14 to 9 and 14 to 12 for the two after it.

Does this mean that it is a better school?

"No," Wright said, "it means that for some unexplained reason those tests were not typical. If you averaged the scores out over a longer period the picture might be entirely different."

He added that otherwise one would have to conclude that the teachers were great this year but poor next year if the test scores returned to their average.

With that warning, here is the ranking of schools in the district's Area A, which includes the communities of Carson, Gardena, Lomita, Harbor City, Wilmington, and San Pedro:

Fast service for tennis classes

Tennis buffs interested in the March-April series of beginning and intermediate classes are advised by the Long Beach Recreation Department to be in the registration line Monday at 7 a.m. at the Community Center, 4900 E. Seventh St.

The early sign-up is scheduled to give working men and women an opportunity to register, explained Gary Brown, sports supervisor for the department. Because tennis classes are among the most popular of all department programs, anyone wanting to be assured of a spot should register Monday, Brown said.

After Monday, registration for all 19 classes in the series starting March 1 will be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays at the department's main offices at 155 Queens Way Landing.

Child-care center OK'd

A special permit for a day-care center in a building at 1535 Gundry Ave. has been approved for the Antioch Baptist Church by the Long Beach Planning Commission.

The property is now zoned R-3 residential, but the church was established prior to the rezoning of the area from C-4 commercial in 1968. Both the church and the child-care center would have been permitted under the prior zoning.

Antioch Baptist Church owns two R-3 lots that have 100 feet of frontage on 16th Street and 130 feet on Gundry Avenue. The church has seating for approximately 300 persons. The child-care center will be confined to the first floor of an existing single-family dwelling on the property.

Nine classes will be offered for beginners and 10 for intermediate players. Each will meet twice weekly for one and one-half hours. Each class will give 15 hours of instruction for $12.

Beginning classes will be offered as follows:

—Billie Jean King Center — Monday and Wednesday at 10:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. and Tuesday and Thursday at 8 p.m.

—El Dorado Park — Monday and Wednesday at 8 p.m.; Tuesday and Thursday at 9 a.m. and 6:30 p.m.

—Cherry Park — Tuesday and Thursday at 6:30 p.m.

—Drake Park — Monday and Wednesday at 8 p.m.

—Silverado Park — Tuesday and Thursday at 8 p.m.

Intermediate classes will be offered as follows:

Coast plan said no aid to ports

By JACK O. BALDWIN
Maritime Editor

The proposed coastal plan, now in the hands of the state's legislators, fails to protect California ports as resources promoting the public welfare, says Fred B. Crawford, Los Angeles Harbor Department general manager.

Crawford is chairman of the Governmental Liaison Committee of the 10-member California Association of Port Authorities. Speaking against the plan as the association's spokesman, Crawford claims that "while the plan recognizes the importance of protecting the multimillion-dollar tourist and fishing industries, it does not include a similar and appropriate philosophy of protecting California's ports—which are a multibillion-dollar coastal industry."

The port executive further claims that, by ignoring the ports, the plan violates the intent of Prop. 20, the citizen-initiated Coastal Zone Conservation Act.

Crawford said there is serious concern about the restrictions the coastal plan legislation could put on the development of all California ports. He said the demands made by the ports' present and future customers call for the creation of new land masses and deepwater channels to handle the increasing size of new super-ships.

"Many of the Coastal Plan policies which insist on maximum use of existing piers and wharves are simply unrealistic," he alleges.

"In Los Angeles Harbor, some of the old wooden piers simply cannot support loads of more than 400 pounds per square foot. They cannot support heavy containerized cargo, for instance," Crawford pointed out.

"Advocates of the plan want no more dredging. If we must adhere to this restriction, our channels will become functionally obsolete, unable to allow passage of new deep-draft vessels," he said.

Crawford said members of CAPA are anxious to work with the Legislature to help draft legislation that would allow ports to continue to operate in a reasonable fashion for the benefit of all the people of the state and nation.

Anthony reelected

John H. Anthony, board vice chairman and chief executive officer, Metropolitan Stevedore Co., has been reelected president of the Marine Exchange of Los Angeles/Long Beach, Inc.

The new chairman of the board is Albert C. Martin, partner in Albert C. Martin & Associates.

Warren B. Penland, district manager of States Steamship Co., was elected vice president while J. Donald Hanauer, executive and general manager of the Los Angeles Area Chamber of Commerce, was reelected secretary, and Robert R. Dockson, president and chief executive officer, California Federal Savings and Loan Association, elected treasurer.

Others elected to the board of directors include: Thomas J. Thorley, Long Beach Harbor general manager; Lew E. Coppersmith, president of L.E. Coppersmith, Inc.; Frank L. George, manager-traffic, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Company; Edward J. Murphy, traffic manager, Union Pacific Railroad Co.; Walter L. Rabenstein, vice president Overseas Shipping Co.; and Robert D. Ryan, manager, Southern California, General Steamship Corp., Ltd.

Fred B. Crawford, Los Angeles Harbor general manager, was named director ex-officio for the exchange.

In-PORT-ant people

Capt. Manfred H.K. Aschemeyer is the new Prudential Lines district manager for Southern California, succeeding Ray Abbott, who will retire Feb. 14 after 40 years in the steamship business. After graduation in 1933 from the California Maritime Academy, Aschemeyer sailed for four years as an officer aboard American flag merchant ships. He became a master at 28, making him one of the youngest on the West Coast. In 1968, he returned to the academy as an instructor in the Department of Nautical Science, a position he held until March 1971, when he joined Prudential. Aschemeyer first served as freight traffic manager in Southern California, working out of Prudential's Long Beach office. A year later, he was appointed assistant district manager of traffic and operations in Southern California and in March 1973, was promoted to operations manager for the Pacific Division in San Francisco.

He attended schools in Baltimore, his birthplace, and in Glen Burnie, Md., before heading west to California. Aschemeyer is national president of the California Maritime Academy Alumni Association, is an honorary member of Lions International, and belongs to the Navy League and the Propeller Club.

A bronze for Sheila, bundle for Red bloc

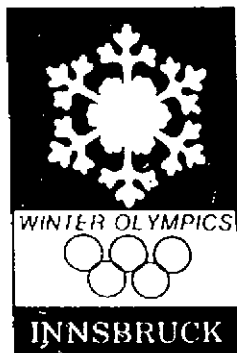

INNSBRUCK (AP)—Sheila Young, a world class athlete who in three days has established herself as one of the top all-time Olympians, became the first American ever to win three medals in one Winter Games Saturday.

But East Germany won four gold medals and the Russians won two as the two Communist-bloc nations began to assert their expected domination of the XII Winter Games.

After Saturday's competition, the two Eastern European nations had won nine of 12 gold medals, and 20 of the 36 medals awarded.

But their expected superiority was overshadowed by Miss Young, a 25-year-old bundle of determination who won the bronze medal in the women's 1,000-meter speed skating race Saturday, and by her teammate, Leah Poulos, who won the silver medal in the same race.

Adding the bronze to her gold medal at 500 meters and the silver at 1,500 meters, Miss Young reached a pinnacle never attained by an American in the 52-year history of this snow and ice festival of international competition. Three Americans had won two gold medals in a

Calif., and Randy Gardner, 17, of Los Angeles.

Also on Saturday, the American national anthem was played for the first time, as Miss Young beamed proudly in receiving her gold medal from Friday's 500-meter race.

It could be the only time the song is heard here, but that is far from certain.

Figure skater Dorothy Hamill has a chance at a gold medal and the U.S. has two medal hopes in today's skiing competition. They Winter Games, but none had won three total medals.

Meanwhile, the fiercely competitive East Germans, backed by millions of dollars in government subsidy that provide for year-round training and top facilities, won gold medals in the 70-meter ski jump, the two-man bobsled and men's and women's huge competition.

Russia's Tatiana Averina, holder of 12 world speed skating records, won the women's 1,000-meter race ahead of Misses Poulos and Young.

In the cross-country, in luge, the ski jump and bobsledding, the Americans fared poorly, finishing no higher than 14th in any event.

In Saturday night's final event, the heavily-favored Russian duo of Irina Rodnina and Alexandr Zaitsev won the gold medal in pairs figure skating.

Two East German couples were second and third, but the surprise was the fifth-place finish earned by the young American team of Tai Babilonia, 15, of Mission Hills, are Cindy Nelson of Lutsen, Minn., in the women's downhill ski race and Bill Koch of Guilford, Vt., in the men's 15-kilometer cross-country event.

Koch provided the surprise of these Games in winning the silver medal in the 30-kilometer cross-country race Thursday. The 15-kilometer is his best race.

While American speed skaters continued to do well on the ice, a team controversy continued to boil between American women's coach Dianne Holm and U.S. Olympic Committee president Philip Krumm.

Miss Holm charged Krumm with "preventing America from starting its strongest skaters" by blocking skate-offs in Europe after what she considered inconclusive Olympic trials.

Krumm accused Miss Holm of acting "like a disgruntled parent" because one of her "pet pupils," team alternate Kim Kostorn, 19, of St. Paul, Minn., was prevented from starting in Saturday's race.

Ruffen tough, 92-67

By JIM McCORMACK
Staff Writer

When Clarence Ruffen, averaging 8.9 points per game, poured in 25 points Saturday night, basketball tacticians among the 3,404 Long Beach Arena onlookers rushed for their notebooks.

"They did a good job of getting the ball inside," suggested Fresno State coach Ed Gregory, "and then it was a matter of a guy starting well and staying hot."

"After 21 games, we're finally running our offense correctly," theorized Long Beach State's Dwight Jones.

Ruffen, an unassuming sophomore, had a more simplified impression of his contributions in Long Beach's startling, 92-67, triumph over Fresno.

"They were looking for me more," the 6-foot-8 forward from Richmond said with a smile after hitting 10 of 18 floor shots and five of seven free throws to easily surpass his previous career high of 18 points.

"They" were all Ruffen's teammates in general and Anthony McGee in particular. McGee finished with six assists.

"Fresno was giving us the lob," said Ruffen, who plays low post in the 49ers' power game offense, "and Tony did a super job of getting the ball inside to me."

A season ago Fresno had become the first Pacific Coast Athletic Association team to ever beat Long Beach in Long Beach by over-playing the "strong side (low post)" side of the 49er offense.

"We knew they'd do it again," said Jones, "and we made some adjustments, such as entering the offense more often from the weak side."

But it was still the basic principle of the power game—getting the ball to the low post—that proved most devastating.

Ruffen had 19 points in the first half and he got 12 of them as Long Beach (10-10), nursing a 16-15 lead, went on a 30-10 explosion in the final 11:31 of the half to establish a 46-25 intermission advantage on the way to its third PCAA triumph in five games.

"Our best half of the year?" echoed Jones, "I could take our best minute out of the first half of each game we've played this year, splice them into a highlight film and they still wouldn't be as good as this one."

Penguins plaster inept Kings, 7-3

By AL LARSON
Staff Writer

You really have to hand it to the Pittsburgh Penguins.

The Kings did just that Saturday night, surrendering four goals in the first 17 minutes en route to a 7-3 shelling before 11,606 Forum fans who booed to watch such misery.

It marked the fourth successive loss to the Penguins, all by lopsided scores, and the Kings now find themselves only 10 points ahead of third-place Pittsburgh.

The mood in the Kings' dressing room was one of disbelief after the Pens notched their first road win since last taking the ice at the Forum Dec. 20. Since then, the Pens have lost eight games and managed one tie during their dry spell.

"The way we played tonight was like our first game of the season," Kings coach Bob Pulford said dejectedly.

"Nobody knew anybody out there. We made more mistakes tonight than in the last five games."

"It wasn't (Gary) Edwards' fault, either," Pulford added in defense of his goalie who was making his first start against Pittsburgh since Dec. 5, 1973.

"Guys were walking in free all night."

The longer the Kings are home, the poorer they seem to play. Pully's six-pack opened the stand with a pair of wins and a tie, then stumbled to Buffalo and Saturday night fell on their suspenders.

Ron Stackhouse, with his sixth goal, Jean Pronovost (33), Rick Kehoe (18) and Lowell MacDonald (15) turned the Kings' defense into a disaster area in the first period.

Butch Goring tried to restore some respectability to the Kings' cause when he scored his 23rd and 24th goals of the season to cut Pittsburgh's lead in half in the second period.

But Pronovost and Syl Apps beat Edwards in the final 25 seconds of the period to rebuild the Pens' four-goal lead.

Casper still tops in Hope

Nicklaus trails by one; Miller third

By DOUG IVES
Staff Writer

PALM SPRINGS—Johnny Miller was certain he had lost all chances of defending his Bob Hope Desert Classic title with 19 putts on the first nine holes Saturday. But he was wrong.

Miller rallied for a 32 on the back side and a 68 total at Indian Wells which moved him into a tie for third place, only two strokes behind leader Billy Casper, who matched Miller's 68 for a 9-under 279 standing.

In between the two is a guy named Jack Nicklaus as well as young Rik Massengale, who may be fated to outscore the superstars. He is a University of Texas graduate, as is Ben Crenshaw who has won the last two tour titles.

Also in the running is Brian (Buddy) Allin, the leader for the first three days. He carded a respectable 71 at tough La Quinta and is tied with Miller at 7-under-par.

One other golfer is within striking distance at 6-under, but since

Featured pairings

10:42 a.m.—Billy Casper, Rik Massengale, Johnny Miller.
10:34 a.m.—Jack Nicklaus, Buddy Allin, Dave Newquist.
10:26 a.m.—Dwight Nevil, Bill Rogers, Mike McCutcheon.

Dave Newquist has never been a contender before—his best finish as a rookie in 1975 was 27th—he doesn't figure to withstand the pressure of being paired with Nicklaus.

THE MAN who will be missed the most is Arnold Palmer. He had to withdraw because of the death of his father in Florida. A five-time winner here, Palmer was in 10th place after 54 holes.

Miller won this event last year by shooting 21 under par. He can't believe he is contention now at 7-under, nor can he believe he is putting so badly.

"If I had been putting only average this tournament would be no contest," said the glib Mormon. "You can't believe the number of short putts I've missed. I've never hit the ball better off the tee. My shots are carrying 250 yards in the air, which means I'm flying over all the trouble."

Miller three-putted twice on the first nine and also missed two six-footers. But he got his act back together just in time on the incoming nine holes, earning birdie putts of 20, 5, 21 and 2 feet.

"I told myself 'You dog, you've given the tournament away' after that performance on the front," said Miller. "I was shocked when I reached the 16th hole and found that 9-under was leading."

Miller was as refreshing as Nicklaus and Casper were boring. The latter two weren't the least bit enthused that they might win here and walk off with $36,000. Since Nicklaus has won 58 tour titles and Casper 51, long ago reaching millionaire status, the ho-hum attitude was predictable.

CASPER did admit he feels fortunate to be leading.

"I've had two rounds where I took 33 and 34 putts," said Billy, who has gone off his buffalo meat diet and is rotund again. Normally you have to put better than that to be in contention.

"I'm not sure how I'll do tomorrow," Casper went on. "I used to get in the groove and keep it for awhile. Now my game changes every day. I guess that comes from growing old."

Casper is 46 and has won only one tournament in the last three years.

Nicklaus shot 69 Saturday and missed numerous chances to shave strokes.

UCLA rolls along; USC falls

Associated Press

Marques Johnson scored 34 points to pace UCLA to a 91-71 victory over Washington State Saturday night at Pullman.

The victory kept the Bruins one game in front of Washington, which handed winless USC its seventh successive defeat at Seattle, 91-79, and Oregon State in the Pacific-8 Conference.

Richard Washington was No. 2 scorer for the Bruins with 19 points. Norton Barnhill led WSU with 27 points, a career high, followed by Steve Pulkodas with 23.

Both teams played evenly until 4:36 in the first half, when UCLA hit the first of eight baskets in a row—including four by Johnson—to make it 29-12 and UCLA maintained the lead the rest of the game. WSU close to within four, but a tip-in by Johnson made it 39-33 at the half.

UCLA outrebounded the Cougars, 50-34. The Bruins shot 50.6 per cent (40-for-79) and also hit 11 of 11 from the charity line. The Cougars hit 44.4 per cent (32-for-72).

AT SEATTLE, Chester Dorsey scored 20 of his career high 24 points in the first half, to ignite sixth-ranked Washington to a comeback-behind victory over the Trojans.

Seven-foot center James Edwards topped the Huskies with 28 points.

USC, 11-9 for the season and 0-7 in conference play, led 29-16 with 11 minutes, three seconds remaining in the first half.

But Dorsey's play became a dominant factor and helped Washington boost its season mark to 18-2 and its Pac-8 record to 5-2.

Dorsey, a junior guard, hit two foul shots to tie the game 41-41. His pass on a fast break gave teammate Mike Neill a layin and the Huskies their first lead of the game, 49-47, with 1:29 to go in the first half.

TORONTO (AP)—Toronto center Darryl Sittler set an all-time National Hockey League single-game record of 10 points and tied the modern mark of six goals as the Maple Leafs walloped the Boston Bruins 11-4 Saturday night.

Grand Prix means money

L.B. race March 28 a $510,000 event

By ALLEN WOLFE
Staff Writer

Automobile racing is big business and nowhere is it more evident than Formula One Grand Prix racing.

Chris Pook knows only too well. Early this week, the president of the Long Beach Grand Prix Association announced all provisions as stipulated in contract negotiations between his organization and the Formula One Constructors Association have been fulfilled, thus clearing the path for the inaugural United States Grand Prix West through the streets of Long Beach on March 28.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT is the culmination of a 14-month, transcontinental correspondence between Pook, the Long Beach travel agent who conceived the idea of Grand Prix racing through city streets, and Bernard Ecclestone and Max Mosley. They are chief spokesmen for the Formula One Constructors Association based in London, England, contractual and financial representative for 95 per cent of all teams currently involved in Grand Prix racing.

"Negotiations went very smoothly and with a minimum of disagreement," said Pook, an English native who has been a resident of Long Beach since 1967. "We have what I would describe as a 'standard agreement' with the FICA, very similar to the agreements held by other countries hosting Formula One races this year."

The "standard agreement" calls for a prize base of $265,000 plus another $245,000 "for transportation of personnel and equipment" from Europe via charter jet, making the entire package an eye-popping $510,000.

"This is the same contract Brazil paid for its race (held Jan. 25) and the same South Africa will have to pay next month (March 7)," explains Pook. "The extra money ($245,000) may seem prohibitive, but not when you consider the logistics and personnel involved."

The monies will be used to hire three British Caledonia Airways charter jets one week prior to the race, one carrying about 225 members of the Grand Prix circuit (drivers, mechanics, car owners, officials and approximately 40 members of the European press). The other two charters, carrying 28 Grand Prix cars worth an estimated $3 million, will leave London on successive days—March 22 and 23. Each trans-Atlantic flight is scheduled to clear customs in Bangor, Maine, before arriving at Long Beach Airport.

FACES OF GRAND PRIX

"Contracts for Formula One rounds in Europe are understandably cheaper because transportation is less of a problem," says Pook. Organizers for races like the French Grand Prix at the Paul Ricard course on July 4 pay $285,000 and the Formula One Constructors must provide their own surface transportation.

Actually, the contract between the Long Beach Grand Prix Association and FICA isn't really a contract in the purest sense of the word.

"Bernie (Bernard Ecclestone) and his group are very informal in their dealings," said Pook. "We both have a letter and agreement of exchange, whereby they agree to perform and we agree to pay."

"I talked with Bernie on a number of occasions and we had a long discussion last October (the U.S. Grand Prix at Watkins Glen, N.Y.). But the basic agreement was solidified over a Western Union telex machine when we acknowledged receipt of each others' sanction. It was as simple as that."

The Formula One Constructors Association (car owners) and the Grand Prix Drivers Association (race drivers) form what amounts to the tightest, closest-knit body in automobile racing and such loyalty insures the health and continued prosperity of the world driver's championship circuit.

Any country or group, like the Long Beach Grand Prix Association, wishing to stage a Formula One event must deal first with the Federation Internationale de L'Automobile, world governing body for auto racing in Paris, to obtain sanction and then with FICA to finalize purse and a myriad of other race-related details.

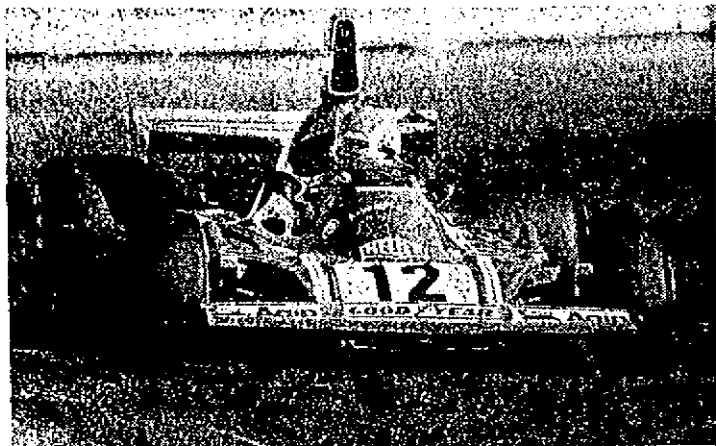

The owners of 20 of the 28 cars entered in next month's United States Grand Prix West are members of the Formula One Constructors Association. They are Ferrari (two cars), McLaren (two cars), Brabham (two cars), Lotus (two cars), Shadow (two cars), Tyrrell (two cars), Williams (two cars), March (two cars), Ensign (two cars), Penske (one car), and Parnelli (one car). Others rumored to sign as FICA members shortly are BRM (one car) and Surtees (one car). The only "pirate" teams, so to speak, are Coperucar from Brazil and Ligier Matra from France.

After the race, all prize monies will be turned over to FICA, who will distribute the purse in the way it deems fit.

"If the owners go according to Hoyle, no one will know how much the winner's share of the purse will be," says Pook. "Formula One racing is like a travelling circus—everyone shares in the pie."

"Don't forget, each car represents an investment of about $135,000, so it's vital to the Grand Prix people that each team gets its share to insure continued health. They pay for performance."

Niki Lauda tunes up for L.B. Grand Prix

PLAYING THE NAME GAME

Ever since my last trip to Hawaii in December, 1974, I had been licking my chops in anticipation of the University of Hawaii basketball team's first visit to Long Beach to meet Dwight Jones' 49ers.

My reason was clear: Brightest star of the Rainbow dribblers was an engaging chap named Henry Hollingsworth.

The fact that Henry included an "s" in his last name was of little importance. Some of the best of the old families never got around to modernizing their surnames.

But with the name of Henry Hollingsworth, I reasoned with complete logic on my side, that this young man on the Hawaii basketball team had to be something special. I could hardly wait for young Hank to appear on the Long Beach Arena court Monday night when his mighty Rainbows tackled Long Beach State.

HENRY HOLLINGSWORTH
What's in a name?... plenty

Chillingly, it almost didn't happen. The Hawaii basketball team will play at Long Beach Arena, but for awhile Henry Hollingsworth wasn't scheduled to appear!

HENRY AND THREE teammates were suspended a couple days ago by athletic director Edward F. Chui.

Henry didn't cheat on an examination. He didn't slug the athletic director. He didn't even stay out late at night drinking mal-tais and chasing wahinis.

Young Henry and his teammates had the gall to make a TV commercial, an apparent violation of the NCAA constitution although the commercial was done gratis. The NCAA did not suspend the quarter-executive director Warren Brown merely reprimanded the university via letter—but the school decided to take its own punitive action and, typically Hawaiian, over-reacted.

Sadly, my long-awaited dream seemed doomed never to materialize. However, for reasons best known to themselves, the Hawaii powers rescinded the suspension 48 hours later.

The Rainbow coach, however, was not fortunate. Bruce O'Neil was relieved of his duties by the school Friday over the incident and a local investigation is pending. Assistant coaches Al Melendez and Rick Pitino will be at the helm against the 49ers Monday.

I TAKE SLIGHT consolation in the fact that Henry Hollingsworth must be some kind of player if he was considered important enough to make a TV commercial. Such an honor is reserved only for the DiMaggios, Namaths and Rodney Rippesys of this world.

On my last visit to the Islands, freshman Henry was just coming into his own. He was the headline hogger on the Honolulu sports pages in December, 1974.

The 18-year-old had rocketed into the big time by being promoted from the Rainbow junior varsity squad to the varsity. An Alabama native who was a prep sensation in New York, Henry merited the promotion by averaging a sparkling 40 points during the early jay-vee games.

HANK HOLLINGSWORTH

As a junior varsity player, Henry was getting more "ink" than the chaps on the more prestigious varsity.

The promotion, which would earn only a line at the end of the notes' paragraph around here, was big news in Hawaii, where the natives usually have little more to cheer about than the size of the surfers' waves.

But Henry was on his way.

ALTHOUGH ONLY 5-11, Hollingsworth proved his lack of size was no handicap to a bulldog with talent by being voted best defensive player on a varsity team for which he didn't play even one full season.

Henry wasn't even recruited by the Rainbows. Although he was an all-Long Island selection at Freeport High in New York and he had a lot of colleges panting in his wake, little Hank was a walk-on to the Oahu campus without an athletic scholarship.

Henry H. disdained the offers and followed the then new Hawaii jayvee coach from New York. Once his dazzling wares were exhibited, Henry was

As folks around here are aware, a Hollingsworth, or even a Hollingsworth, is always on a need basis.

IT WAS MY MISFORTUNE to arrange a long-distance telephonic interview with Henry on the same day that the young tiger was informed of his untimely (for both of us) suspension.

"I don't think Henry is in a mood to be interviewed," said Ed Inouye, Hawaii's saddened sports information director. "He might go to Long Beach with the team because his scholarship won't be taken away, but he's pretty down in the dumps right now."

I guess. But he certainly wasn't any lower than old HHH in California.

Thanks to Inouye, however, the Hollingsworth in California got a deeper insight to the remarkable talents of the Hollingsworth in Hawaii, albeit no interview.

Henry competed in four post-season all-star games his last high school season in New York and was selected the most valuable player in THREE of them. Try that sentence on again for size, friends.

He held the all-time Freeport High record for career assists (350) and most assists in one season (150), played in 70 consecutive games and was the school's third all-time leading scorer (960 points).

"HENRY IS ONE of the best stand-still jump shooters around," said Inouye, clearly enamored himself with young Hank's reservoir of talent.

"He gave us one of the best young backcourt combinations in the nation. He's so determined on defense that he completely denies the offensive man the ball. He forces the offensive man into a foul."

"Henry gives 100 per cent every time he's on the court. He's the hardest worker on the team."

Are you getting the idea of what we almost would have missed Monday night?

A communications major, Henry hopes to become a disc jockey or a television announcer. Hopefully, he will refrain from making further TV commercials.

Communications is an excellent major for Henry, for he has little trouble communicating. The Hawaii football coach will attest to that fact.

"Henry's room is over mine in the dormitory," Larry Price wailed while the football and basketball teams were sharing the dorm in December. "When he turns his damned stereo on full blast, everyone has to listen to his kind of music."

That's my boy.

But I wish that Henry had turned to me for advice before he consented to make that damned TV commercial. His whimsy almost ruined my whole basketball season.

Ride 'em cowboy

Leo Camarillo, a rodeo champ, won almost $51,000 last year but hardly anybody noticed because he is not in big time sport. Rodeo returns to Long Beach Arena next Friday for three-day run.

Nobody knows a rodeo champ

"Cowboys are funny. They're different from most athletes in that they're independent people. It's kind of sad, because it takes away from the sport." — Leo Camarillo.

Last week's preliminary Superstars competition included Rafer Johnson, Maury Wills, Johnny Rutherford, Leo Camarillo...

Who? "I didn't set the world on fire," says Camarillo, "but it was fun because I got to identify with other athletes."

Camarillo's game is rodeo, which comes to mind with the return of the Golden State Rodeo Co. to the Long Beach Arena next weekend. He is the current world all-around champion, legitimately placing him among the elite of sport. He concludes that all successful athletes have one thing in common.

"We were all there to have fun," he says, "but under those smiles was the taste of defeat that none of us really appreciate."

BUT BEING a barnyard superstar isn't quite the same. A 10-gallon hat and the fancy gold and silver buckle are the only clues to his accomplishments. It frustrates him, not only for the satisfaction of his own ego but for the esteem of his sport.

"You know," he says, "cowboys are funny. They're different from most athletes in that they're independent people. It's kind of sad, because it takes away from the sport."

Rodeo, wrapped up in the saga of the Great American Cowboy, is one of the oldest competitive sports in the world and it hasn't changed much over the years. That, Camarillo believes, is part of the problem.

"Ninety per cent don't rodeo for a living," he says, "and the 10 per cent that put rodeo in the eye of the public don't have enough vote to make the rule changes that could make rodeo what it should be."

In other words, Leo concludes, "you've got 90 per cent that don't give a damn. They're doing what they want to do and they're happy."

ONE MAJOR rule change this year places less of a premium on a cowboy piling up as many points as possible by competing in as many rodeos as possible.

"You have to qualify among the top 15 to compete in the National Finals," Camarillo explains. "Then whoever wins the most money in his event will be crowned the world champion in that event."

So for the urban public, the national competition will be more clearly defined. But it will be tough on the top hands, such as Camarillo. His specialty is team roping, and he won it the first five years he competed in the National Finals at Oklahoma City, establishing that event as the "Camarillo benefit."

"If you have a man who dominates an event it takes away from him, because on any given day you can get beat," Leo says. "But I think the organization has to try those things to get ahead in the sports world."

Camarillo credits Larry Mahan, the former champion, with doing "more for rodeo than anybody ever has. I hope to do as much."

"But you have a lot of friction being a champion. You have to be careful how you say things. There's a lot of politics and jealousy in the sport. It's difficult for a champion to get things the way he wants 'em because people will think he's thinking of himself... and to a certain extent, he is."

"I express my feelings like any other winner would in any other sport and I get into some arguments over it. A lot of others are kind of afraid to say what they think because they just want to stay one of the group. But I've gotten away from that. I don't like to be a follower."

LEO LOUIS CAMARILLO, 30, of Mexican and Indian ancestry, can remember when he was just one of the group.

"There's quite a bit of difference between a rodeo cowboy and just a cowboy," he says. "I've been both places: I've had to work those long hours for 15 dollars a day."

"It's kind of like the ghetto. The minority groups in the city ghetto get out playing basketball or baseball. Rodeo is a cowboy's out."

Last year, as world champion, Leo won $50,831 and that big, expensive buckle, which beats punching cows in anybody's ghetto. Glen Campbell's country song, Rhinestone Cowboy, is close to the truth, Leo says, "but most of the movies and songs are not realistic."

"They get away from what it really takes to make anything out of it. A lot of 'em express the way the life is as a drunken brawl or a good time or a kick-ass attitude. That's not the way it really is."

"You have to sacrifice a lot of hard work and family, it takes good management, a lot of things. It's tough to make it. I mean, I'm not wanting you to feel sorry for me, but it's a real chore."

LEO CREDITS Sharon, his bride of two years, with much of his success.

"I have a little wife," he tells it. "She's a very competitive young lady herself, and I owe her a lot. She puts up with a lot of hard times. When I'm not home she has to handle all the business things, along with having to keep my horses rode and exercised. She has done sure made a contribution to my championship and my winnings."

"On top of that, she's a champion in her own right. She went to college on a rodeo scholarship, was a world champion goat tyer and she's a very accomplished roper. In 1973 she was the world champion steer undecorator. That's where you chase a steer like you're gonna throw it, only you just reach down and take a ribbon off its back."

Sharon also barrel races and has been an airline stewardess but Leo met her at a rodeo. They live on a 20-acre ranch in Oakdale, Calif., a few miles east of Modesto along the Stanislaus River; but will be moving soon to a 150-acre spread near Clements to the north.

Leo is opening his own tack business — Camarillo Enterprises.

SHARON ATTENDED Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, on a rodeo scholarship. Leo, born in Santa Ana and raised in Santa Ynez, skipped college and is sorry for it.

"I don't know if I was ignorant or what," he says. "I didn't even know I could go to college on a Mexican-Indian minority group type of thing or a rodeo scholarship, but education didn't mean much to me then."

He is articulate and his opinions are profound, but now that he's a champion, Leo Camarillo understands the need for something more—administrative and promotional skill that could lift his sport up by its bootstraps.

"I would like to see it grow to where I'd be recognized for what I am in more circles than just by people related to rodeo. I'd like to pick up a New York Times or Sports Illustrated and see rodeo recognized with stories people can relate to."

"If somebody would promote cowboys and rodeo like they do other sports, we could be recognized as professional athletes, too."

UNITED STATES speed skater Leah Poulos tips her cowboy hat while Sheila Young phones home after their medal-winning performances in 1,000-meter event at Innsbruck Saturday. Sheila, Leah: Girls from back home

INNSBRUCK (AP)—It's a garland of multi-colored medals—gold, silver and bronze—for Sheila Young, a precious silver for Leah Poulos and wedding bells ahead for both of America's queens of the racing blades.

"My plans are to compete in the world championships, then retire this year and get married," said Miss Young, 25, of Detroit.

She captured the bronze in the Olympic 1,000 meters Saturday to hang around her neck along with the gold and silver medallions won earlier on the speed skating track.

She became the first American athlete, male or female, to win three medals in one year in the Winter Olympic Games.

"I had hoped to bow out on a high note," she said. "These three medals make it possible."

HER LONG-TIME teammate and keenest rival, Miss Poulos, 24, from Northbrook, Ill., was just as proud of the silver medal she won in Saturday's race, finishing 14-100ths of a second behind Russia's world record-holder, Tatiana Averina, and about a half-second ahead of Miss Young.

"I want to continue competing and I want to return to college in the fall," said Miss Poulos. "I would like to get married but Peter and I want to wait until we have more money. You need money to get married."

Miss Poulos' fiance is Peter Mueller, 21, of Mequon, Wis., who skates the 500, 1,000 and 1,500-meter races for the U.S. Olympic team.

"Peter and I have known each other since we were kids," Miss Poulos said. "We were just skating pals then. Now we've been engaged one-two years. Peter is a mirror image for me. He knows when I am skating wrong even when I don't know myself."

Miss Young's future husband is a mustachioed Olympic cyclist, James Ochowicz of Milwaukee, who met Sheila when both were competing in the World Cycling Championships in 1973.

That was the year that Miss Young took a nasty spill in San Sebastian, Spain, gashing her arms and legs and splitting her head so badly she needed metal clips to close the wound. She went on to win.

"The next year I suffered a bad concussion at Barbados but I also won there," she said. "That's where I got the reputation of being tough. I don't think I am tough."

The two girls are contrasts in looks and personalities, but both are rugged competitors and neither gives the impression of being a hardened athlete.

Miss Young is very feminine, her 5-foot-4 and 130-pound body giving a false impression of fragility. She is ebullient, enthusiastic in moments of relaxation and highly personable.

Miss Poulos has the dark-eyed, classical good looks of her Grecian heritage. She is basically quiet, low key, the still water that runs deep.

SHEILA AND LEAH have been skating rivals for 16 years, their efforts, like all American speed skaters, centered on the single Olympic track in the United States at West Allis, Wis.

Coming from different cities and different backgrounds, they are not close friends. At the same time, they are not bitter rivals.

RFE kicked out by IOC

Associated Press

INNSBRUCK—A reporting team from Radio Free Europe, the U.S.-sponsored station broadcasting to Communist Eastern Europe, was drummed out of the Olympics Saturday night as a result of what was alleged to be Soviet pressure.

Seven reporters and four technicians handed in their accreditations in compliance with an order from the International Olympic Committee.

Sources said the technicality that led to invalidation of the accreditations "was cooked up by the Soviets."

The technicality cited was that the accreditations were not properly signed and stamped by a national Olympic committee. Because the station is based in Munich, the credentials were required to have German stamps but were without them.

Jan MacDonald, bureau chief for the station, said, "German colleagues here have drawn our attention to the fact that most of the German radio and television journalists also have identity cards which bear neither the signatures of the president and general secretary of the German NOC nor the NOC stamp."

MacDonald said the station would continue to report on the Games by buying tickets to the events and making its headquarters in a hotel.

'No way' U.S. can beat Czechs

INNSBRUCK—The young United States Olympic hockey squad, visions of a medal undaunted by a 6-2 opening-round Group A loss to the Soviet Union, goes against Czechoslovakia today.

The Czech coach says, "There is no way they (the Americans) can win."

Four years ago in Sapporo, Japan, the U.S. scored a stunning upset over Czechoslovakia en route to a silver medal under coach Murray Williamson.

"Our boys were about the same age," said Williamson, "but they were much more experienced. Czechoslovakia, Finland and Russia could all play in the top level of the National Hockey League."

Soldier killed on ski course

INNSBRUCK—A 19-year-old Austrian soldier, assigned to cleanup operations on the 12th Winter Olympics' downhill course, was killed Saturday when he crashed against a fence post while descending the slope on skis.

Pvt. Georg Dagn and members were cleaning up the slope where Austria's Franz Klammer won a gold medal Thursday.

Taiwan fighting to stay in INNSBRUCK—Taiwan is putting up a fight to stay in the Olympic Games.

Its National Olympic Committee circulated a booklet this week defending its position and declaring that its sportsmen will never participate as part of a mainland China team.

Peking has applied for IOC recognition but, as always, demanded that Taiwan be expelled from the Olympic movement. It said Taiwan athletes would be welcome to compete in a mainland Chinese team.

Young Newquist faces butterflies...and Jack

By DOUG IVES Staff Writer

PALM SPRINGS—One golfer will seem out of place today when the leaders tee off in the closing round of the Bob Hope Desert Classic.

That man, young Dave Newquist, doesn't mind admitting he will be nervous. But it isn't so much that he is in sixth place and on the verge of his biggest payday as it is being paired with Jack Nicklaus.

"I'll have a lot of butterflies," Newquist confessed. "I've never been in the hot box before, and I'm sure no one has ever seen me on television because I've never been on it before."

Newquist, who played the mini-tour circuit in Southern California for two years while residing in Anaheim, has played the best golf of his career here, posting rounds of 74 at Eldorado, 70 at La Quinta, 67 at Indian Wells and 71 at Bermuda Dunes.

"YOU NEVER know how to handle the pressure until you get in that situation," said Newquist, a native of Kansas City. "I knew sooner or later I would be paired with a superstar. It had to happen sometime and it might as well be now."

The best Newquist finished in his rookie year was 27th at Milwaukee. He earned only $6,300 last year, about $24,000 short of making expenses. His sponsors are from Kansas City and include a city editor of the Kansas City Star.

Newquist's only regret is that this tournament isn't a four-rounder, like all others on the tour.

"I would be celebrating today with my biggest check," he said. "But I feel I will hold up okay tomorrow. I sure hope so. I need the money."

Newquist, 25, like so many young pros, is convinced he can make a living on the tour. But he feels sorry for the many others like him who have failed to qualify for a tour card.

"There are at least 100 golfers not on the tour who are as good as most of the ones out here," he said. "The mini-tour showed me that. Maybe with this new concept they have, everyone will get a chance."

The PGA has announced that in 1978 it will launch a meaningful secondary tour which offers 20 tournaments at $50,000. It is open to all-comers, although each player will have a sizeable entry fee, just like the mini-tours.

"It is expensive," says Newquist, "but it will give a lot of young guys the chance they aren't getting now. If they can't make it on the secondary tour, they ought to know enough to quit."

NEWQUIST, who won $40,000 on mini-tours over a two-year period, thinks Alan Tapie of Downey is "about the best of the young players" who graduated from his qualifying school in the fall of 1974.

While the qualifying school is restrictive (Newquist tried twice before making it), Dave says, "All of the young players have eventually made it except one. The guy who could make it out here but can't get through the school is Jeff Van Wagenen."

Stephenson enjoys 1st lead; Laura is 4 back

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — Jan Stephenson, who had never led a tournament, overcame windy conditions Saturday to record a three-under-par 69 for a two-stroke lead after 36 holes of the 54-hole, $60,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Miss Stephenson's two-under-par 142 total put her two shots ahead of defending champion Sandra Haynie and first round leader Sally Little, who were tied at 144. Miss Haynie fired her second straight even-par 72 and Miss Little soared to a 77 after posting a 67 Friday.

Franklin takes 9th grade title

Six-foot-six Ray Whiting scored 19 points and teammate Gary Lee added 14 to lead Franklin Junior High to the Long Beach ninth grade basketball championship with a 56-45 win over Marshall Saturday morning at Millikan High.

John Stephenson tipped in a basket at the buzzer to give Hill a 56-64 win over Marshall in the eighth-grade championship game. Jon Billinger led Hill with 22 points while Scott Fox added 19.

Of L.B. Sportsman's Club Govington at the helm

The Long Beach Sportsman's Club, which will reach its 40th birthday next year, installed its 1976 officers at the annual dinner-dance Saturday night at the clubhouse on Santa Fe Avenue. Claude Govington took over the president's gavel from Ron Brightenburgh.

Taking their offices with him were David Irmen, vice president; Bush Blumenstein, treasurer; Norman Covington, secretary, and Sandy Jones, sergeant-at-arms. Directors: Bob Neher, Bill Hamilton, Ray Beck, Dr. Tom Becker and outgoing president Brightenburgh.

Covington and his wife, Joyce, live at 1853 Poppy St., Long Beach, with three of their five children, Claude Jr., Curt and Crystal. Two other children, Donna and David, are married.

CLAUDE COVINGTON
Sportsman's Club president

Advisory Council for the Grant School for more than four years. He received the PTA Honorary Service Award for service to youth last year.

WITH THAT KIND OF RECORD, Claude should make things hum at the Sportsman's Club. Claude is a former Texan, having been born in Pampa in 1941. He moved west with his parents eight years later and was graduated from Poly High School in 1952. He then spent three years in the U. S. Navy. Returning to civilian life, he became assistant manager of the Penny Auto Body Works.

Although the Sportsman's Club is noted primarily for its great help to Ducks Unlimited each year, there are other events, such as: Hunting and fishing trips to Mexico; fishing charters to San Diego landings; annual Stampede and steak barbeque; annual luau, and the kids' fun night for children of the members.

Fishing awards for the 1975 season were handed out Saturday night to the following:

Jed Welsh, most jewel point for trophy fish and largest yellowtail (28 pounds, 7 ounces); Harrison Moore, largest marlin (160 pounds); Rusty Thornton, largest albacore (26-12); Odis Kesler, largest salmon (10 pounds); Jed Welsh, largest corbina (3-7), and Bob Neher, largest trout (3-4).

Covington said that the club already is planning its annual Ducks Unlimited Night for April 19. The club already has raised enough money for one large lake project in Canada for breeding waterfowl, and is well advanced on still another DU project.

STOEGER PUBLISHING COMPANY, of South Hackensack, N. J., has just concluded a distribution arrangement with Crown Publishing Company under which Stoeger will take over the exclusive distribution of a new line of paperback titles to the sporting goods trade.

The large-size paperback versions are identical in every respect to the higher-priced hard cover originals except for the covers and will sell in the $4.95 and $5.95 bracket. The books will have a "Crown Stoeger imprint. Here are some of the initial titles ready for the sporting goods trade:

"Practical Black Bass Fishing," by Mark Sosin and Bill Dance; "Tackle Craft," by C. Boyd Pfeiffer; "Master Fly-Tying Guide," by Art Flick (that's a great one for the fly-tying students at the Long Beach Casting Club); "Practical Fishing Knots," by Lefty Kreh and Mark Sosin; "Selective Trout," by Doug Swisher and Carl Richards.

Betcha didn't know that horseshoe pitching, while still a backyard hobby, has grown so much that it has become an international tournament sport. Well, that's right, and Otis W. Reno, who wrote a book about pitching horseshoes in 1963, finally revised it late last year. "Pitching Championship Horseshoes" came off the A. S. Barnes and Company presses just prior to Christmas. It is available now at $8.95 at book stores, or direct from the publishing company.

"For example, if a driver sets fast qualifying time and leads 10 laps, only to drop out with mechanical failure and finish 24th, he will be rewarded handsomely because he gave the crowd a bloody good show. If that happened in NASCAR stock car racing the team would go home with perhaps $100.

GRAND PRIX RACING can't operate that way because of the prohibitive cost."

The United States Grand Prix West is one of 14 world driver's championship races scheduled this year, and it is the first time in the history of Formula One that two events with full championship points will be held in the same country in the same year.

The United States Grand Prix has been held every year since 1962 at Watkins Glen, N.Y. This year's race will be held October 10.

Ticket sales for the Long Beach race have topped $240,000 since they went on mail order subscription Jan. 17, and "we are averaging between $8,000 and $12,000 in sales each day," says Pook.

General ticket sales at Ticketron, Liberty and Mutual agencies, as well as the Long Beach Arena box office, went on sale Wednesday with a price range of from $12 to $35.

The Long Beach Grand Prix Association has contracted for reserved grandstand and bleacher seating for 92,205 spectators, an increase of approximately 30,000 seats over that available at last September's Formula 5,000 race. "With a little effort we should be able to accommodate 100,000 spectators," said Pook.

Ragtime close to sailing win

MANZANILLO, Mex. (AP)—The 62-foot yacht Ragtime had a 50-mile lead in the San Diego-to-Manzanillo yacht race Saturday and had a chance to win the slow-starting race by this morning.

Ragtime, skippered by Bill White and Bill Pasquani out of the Long Beach Yacht Club, reported at the Saturday roll call that she was only 110 miles from the finish line.

Race officials estimated that Ragtime, twice winner of the Transpac race, could cross the finish line by midnight if the winds hold.

Fifty miles behind Ragtime was the 61-footer Joli from the San Diego Yacht Club. Joli is sailing without her skipper, Nick Frazee, who left the boat two days ago to fly home because of illness in his family.

The rest of the fleet, which left San Diego Jan. 31, was approximately 250 miles from the finish line off the Manzanillo jetty.

U.S. gains finals

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP)—The United States, with Ty Stoffel striking out 12, defeated defending champion Canada 1-0 Saturday and gained the final of the World Softball Championships. Although losing, Canada previously qualified to meet New Zealand in the other semifinal. But rain postponed the semifinals until today.

Earlier Saturday, New Zealand topped Japan 2-0.

LEMON WILL HELP ROAST REARDON

Newest baseball Hall of Famer Bob Lemon will be among the diamond figures of past and present who will be on hand Tuesday night to roast Beans Reardon when the former major league umpire is inducted into the Long Beach Century Club Hall of Fame.

Roastmaster will be Chuck Stevens, former major league first baseman and present secretary of the Association of Professional Ballplayers of America.

Former major leaguers who will participate in the festivities include Bobby Sturgeon, Jerry Priddy, Manny Perez and Bert Shepard, onetime Washington Senator pitcher who played with an artificial leg after a World War II injury.

Among active players in attendance will be Bob Bailey of the Cardinals, Tony Muser of the Orioles and Davey Lopes of the Dodgers, along with Harry Minor, New York Mets' scouting supervisor.

The open-to-the-public affair will be held at Adolphus Restaurant in the Queensway Hilton. Reservations can be secured Monday through Dick Bowdye (421-7466).

Masters swim meet on tap next Sunday

More than 150 swimmers ages 20 to 75 are expected to compete next Sunday in the Long Beach Masters Invitational at Belmont Plaza Olympic Pool.

The event will involve men and women swimmers from as far away as northern California, most preparing for the Short Course Nationals at Mission Viejo in May.

Competition will be in five-year age groups and will include all basic strokes at distances of 50 to 400 yards, plus a 200 yard freestyle relay.

Long Beach Master's Swim Club national record holders competing will be Maxine Merling, 62, who has 14 national marks; Dorothea Cole, 65; Rita Simonton, 57; Mimi Hayes, 28; Tom Lind, 57, and Tom Monahan, 65.

L.B. women athletes face shift to CIF

By ELAINE RISINGER
Staff Writer

A change in directions for girls' athletics is under way in Long Beach. Beginning in September, young women participating in the interscholastic sports program offered by the five senior high schools will shift competition from the local Vinnie G. Eaton League to CIF.

At this point, six sports have been tentatively listed for CIF play—volleyball, basketball, softball, swimming, tennis and badminton.

Margaret Cloonan, consultant for girls' physical education in the Long Beach Unified School District, announced this week that the decision came as the result of a ruling made in the summer of 1974 by the CIF, state governing body for high school athletics. This regulation requires all districts participating in CIF to include girls and boys in the program.

Many districts in the state joined during the

There is only so much money and so much coaching talent.

She continued, "If you look at competitive programs, they are really programs for athletically gifted children only. The average youngster gets lost because there are not enough other kinds of opportunities open to him."

"As Americans, we become spectators in this country, and yet we continue to create sports programs that are nothing but spectator amusement. You read articles, 'Let's be participants, not spectators,' yet we continue to put the coaching emphasis on the highly skilled few and then fill up a grandstand."

Margaret Davis, head of the girls' program for the CIF, doesn't feel CIF necessarily limits a school. "If a school fields interscholastic teams and has a regular set schedule, the two top teams would be considered varsity and junior varsity and CIF teams," she said. "Anything below that does not have to follow CIF regulations in uniforms, equipment, insurance, medical or whatever."

"There are schools in Orange County that have as many as 10 to 15 lesser ranked teams, and they play a limited schedule. It continues to give them broad participation which is what their particular physical educators want to see. A school can set it up pretty much as it likes. Both options are open. It just depends on what the teachers and principals want to support in their schools."

Besides, she adds, "providing competition for the talented athlete is no different from offering advanced math and English classes for the academically gifted."

BOTH Margaret Cloonan and Margaret Davis agree financing will have to be increased to participate in the CIF. CIF dues (eight cents for every student) have been collected for years. "Girls have been paying without getting any program," Margaret Davis said.

The biggest budget considerations will be in salaries of coaches (for more and extended practice periods), transportation, officiating and equipment.

"Schools are feeling the dollar pinch," the Long Beach consultant said. "The boys have had to take a really good look at budget. There is tremendous interest in volleyball and soccer. Many community groups would like to have these played interscholastically, but there is only so much money to spread so far. The school district has had to take a stand that they can not afford to expand the boys' program at this time under the real budget crisis in public education."

Hockey briefs

PHILADELPHIA (NHL)—Center Rick MacLeish underwent surgery to repair torn ligaments in his left knee and will be sidelined the rest of the season.

She added that equalizing expenditures between the boys' and the girls' program as required by the federal government could affect the boys' budget. "Title 9 is very, very definitive. Equal opportunity and equitable expenditure of resources. That doesn't mean that it has to be five cents here and five cents there, but how are you going to make it equitable if there is only so much money in the school budget?"

Monies available will be a factor in retaining a competitive program for any young woman who wishes to participate. "Ideally, we would like to retain an intramural program which would not be as hotly competitive as the interscholastic."

MISS DAVIS, at CIF, foresees the development of a strong intramural program. "When the girls start coming on strong, and Title 9 is going to allow it, schools are not going to be able to afford three, four or five teams for boys in each sport. They are going to have to cut back to probably just two—two for boys and two for girls—and then to fill the gap, a strong intramural program is going to have to be developed."

Concluding, Margaret Cloonan again praised Title 9 and CIF for the opportunities they have opened up where needed. "In looking to the future, it will be very interesting to see how girls' athletics develops... women are questioning the superimposing of the men's game plan. It works fine for the men, but why should we have to simply duplicate and live under it?"

Trojans meet Crowley Monday

Rod Dedeaux's USC baseball team, which has won six successive Pacific-8 Conference titles and five of the last six NCAA championships meets the Crowley All-Stars Monday afternoon at 2:30 on Dedeaux Field.

Crowley team will be former Trojans Steve Kemp (Detroit's recent signee), Don Buford, Roy Smalley and Ed Putman.

Kemp's grand slam home run paced USC major league alumni to a 9-3 win over the Trojans in a Jan. 24 game.

INDEPENDENT PRESS TELEGRAM ORANGE COUNTY EVENING NEWS AND INDEPENDENTS

MORRY RABIN
Editor

Speraw saw evolution ahead—got aboard

A man who took an innovative look at real estate sales technique early in his career made a quantum jump into success four years ago.

Long Beach's Oliver (Ollie) Speraw said at first, "Who needs it," when he was approached by the unknown and just-incorporated company Century 21 in November 1971.

But as he studied the evolution taking place in real estate he realized that most brokers did not have the time and every skill required to compete successfully against large chain companies beginning to dominate the field.

HIS CAREFUL consideration is now worth $9 million daily sales volume.

A month later he bought the first master franchise sold by Century 21. It covered southwest Los Angeles County from the Orange County line to Mulholland Drive and from the Santa Ana Freeway to the ocean.

Century 21 physically came into existence when the parent company opened in Orange County on Feb. 11, 1972.

Speraw opened in the Long Beach area April 9.

Now he has 88 member offices in his region and is adding new ones at a four-a-month clip.

From the beginning Century 21 has opened in 19 states plus Canada and is due to be in 28 states by the end of the year.

THERE ARE 1,900 total offices of which

OLLIE SPERAW

260 are in the Long Beach-Los Angeles-Orange County area with the $9 million daily volume.

Speraw, who also sits on the parent company's board, said it is adding 100 offices a month with a goal of 6,000 nationwide.

"Our success is hinged on the fact that our services to member brokers and their sales forces earn many times more than the prices they pay.

"Each member office is benefitted by the millions of dollars in promotion, recruiting assistance, superior sales training force, varied communication devices and sales tools, a national referral service plus management training and counseling," he said.

IN ANOTHER break with the norm he induced Dr. William Kroske, a clinical psychologist and real estate broker to leave his successful real estate counseling business and join Century 21.

Dr. Kroske's first move was to include a "personality profile" as part of the Century 21 real estate licensing school course. This enables the student to learn his selling strengths and how to increase his success.

Century 21's president, Art Bartlett, said that "most of the sales tools and systems designed by Speraw are used across the U.S. today. We are using him to write and design our sales manual to be available to all member brokers."

Speraw is working also on a computerized escrow and management system which will ultimately place a computer terminal in every Century 21 office providing eight management services, including complete escrow service any time on any day of the week.

WHERE DID Speraw start?

First, he was a general contractor in 1947 and worked with civic groups, including presidency of the Long Beach Jaycees and then to three five-year terms on Long Beach's Water Commission.

Then it was real estate in 1955, plus teaching at City College on real estate from law to investments.

He formed Sparow Realty in 1964 and concentrated on recruiting and training in addition to working with communication devices.

His sales force had 50 per cent less turnover and achieved three times more production than his most successful competitors.

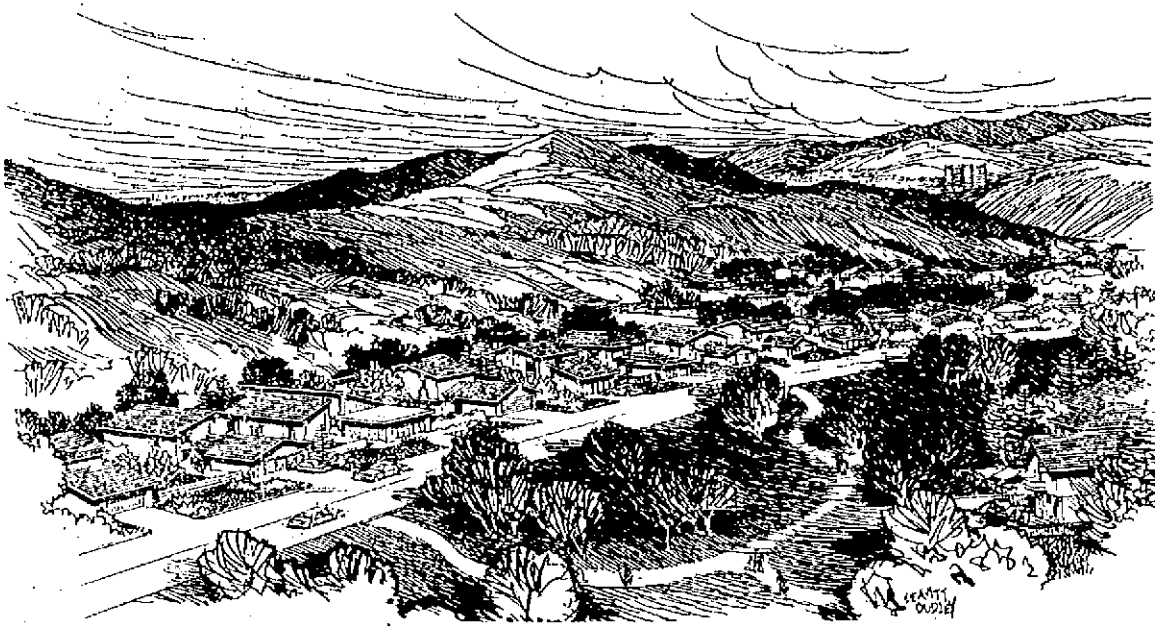

He was recognized by the 50,000-member California Association of Realtors for first place for "Office Design and Layout" in 1965 and a first in 1966 for "Business Getting Devices."

While Congress just started requiring that all costs be disclosed to buyers in advance, Speraw was requiring his sales force to do so accurately in the '50s.

Then he recognized the need for franchising and his late '71-'72 decision tells the story today.

If you ask him "What's new?" generally he has good answers — most of the time a new one.

SKETCH SHOWS HOW SUMMIT LAKE HOMES ARE NESTLED HIGH IN ANAHEIM HILLS

SPECTACULAR PANORAMIC VIEW

Second phase of Summit Lake homes in Anaheim Hills begun

Although just opened a few previewing weeks, more than 75% of the homes in phase one have been sold at the patio home Lake Summit development as it opens its second sales phase. The prices, from $50,900, represent the lowest-priced single-family patio homes available in the Anaheim Hills area, sales counselors Walker & Lee report.

The sales aides say "Each unit in the first phase features a spectacular panoramic view of the surrounding Anaheim Hills countryside as well as Orange County."

Terry O'Neill, Walker & Lee sales manager, points out the homes are individual, single-family patio structures on their own lots, with no common walls shared by neighboring units. They are not condominiums, townhomes, townhouses or apartment homes.

LAKE SUMMIT, a project of S.I.R. Developers Inc., eventually will be comprised of 150 view-oriented homes on 35 acres in master-planned Anaheim Hills. Total community valuation is more than $8.7 million dollars. Prices range from $50,900 to $67,900 and are set amid homes valued at more than $100,000.

The first and second phases will be followed by increments of 40 and a final group of 43 homes. Phase one occupancy is scheduled now. Construction of the second phase is in progress, and reservations are being taken.

A maintenance-free, leisure lifestyle will apply, Solomon said, because a professional firm will be retained by the homeowners association to maintain landscaped front yards, neighborhood common areas and recreational facilities.

Walker & Lee also pointed out that Lake Summit offers the "zero side yard" building concept, in which the unit is placed at one side of the lot, thereby eliminating the normally wasted side yard area.

Lake Summit homes are offered in three or four bedrooms with four floor plans and 12 exterior styles. One and two story units contain 1,350 to 1,910 square feet. The largest unit is the San Moritz, a four-bedroom, 2½ bath, 2 story unit, with a powder room and full bath on the lower level plus a third bath and three bedrooms on the second level. Also on the ground level is a deluxe equipped kitchen with patio serving bar, nook area, family room, spacious living-dining room, and master bedroom suite. Laundry facilities are in the attached two-car garage.

Lake Summit homes include continuous cleaning gas range and oven, trash compactors, dishwashers and disposals, luminous kitchen ceilings, custom oak cabinets with full length rollers and door guides, built-in pantries and carpeting throughout, including the living room, dining room, all bedrooms, hall, stairways and closets.

ALSO FEATURED are custom fireplaces, wood shake roofs, ceramic tile entries, lifetime concrete walks and drives, full insulation, automatic garage door openers, copper plumbing, solid copper electrical wiring, cathedral ceilings, custom cabinetry, and a smoke detector system.

Community facilities include a large swimming pool and cabana, whirlpool jacuzzi bath, regulation size tennis court, hiking trails and mini-parks.

Four furnished model homes decorated by Bonnie Cunningham of Newport Beach are open daily from 11 a.m. daily and from 10 a.m. on weekends. They are at 959 South Lake Summit Drive, just north of Serrano Avenue at the top of Anaheim Hills Road. From the Riverside Freeway, exit on Imperial Highway and go south to Santa Ana Canyon Road. Then go east to Anaheim Hills Road, and south again to the top of the hill and Serrano Drive. Then left on Serrano.

L.B. townhomes' location stressed

Its ideal location in Long Beach has been one of the important sales factors at Country Club Gardens, the new luxury adult townhome community by Sterling Development Corp., according to Norm Meager, vice president of the building firm.

Situated in the Virgilina Country Club neighborhood, one of the prime residential areas of Long Beach, the townhomes are a short freeway drive from employment and metropolitan centers of Los Angeles and Orange County.

The exclusive development is also close to recreation of all kinds, including the Los Cerritos Park and tennis courts, Lakewood Golf and Tennis Club and world-famous beaches and marinas.

MEAGER NOTED that more than 65% of the new homeowners at Country Club Gardens are professional people and 20% own their own businesses. Among these are several doctors, a dentist, an architect, engineers, teachers and a banker, as well as many engaged in scientific professions.

Country Club Gardens has just 72 elegant, split-level townhomes priced from $52,950 with excellent conventional financing. Lush green gardens with waterfalls, streams, bridges and reflection lakes surround the homes.

The environmental landscaping includes winding, lighted walkways and drives and a large free-form swimming pool, jacuzzi and night-lighted paddle tennis courts are provided in the private recreation areas.

Rustic contemporary exteriors of the homes have been designed in keeping with the area's fine homes and feature custom architectural detailing and cedar shake roofs. Each home has a trellised entry, private garden patio and over-sized two car garage with laundry area and automatic door opener.

Innovative floor plans of the Country Club Gardens homes offer from 1,328 to 1,600 square feet of living area with three bedrooms or three bedrooms and den, both with two baths.

Appointments include designer fireplaces (two in larger models), atrium balconies, formal dining rooms, dramatic large living rooms, cathedral ceilings and wood parquet entry foyers.

THERE ARE spacious master suites and convenience-planned kitchens with deluxe Tappan appliances, pantries and luminous ceilings. Ceramic tiling and wall-to-wall carpeting are more luxury features.

Immediate occupancy is now available at the new townhome community. The sales office and model homes are open daily from 10 a.m. at 3655 Country Club Drive and Cedar Avenue.

His sales force had 50 per cent less turnover and achieved three times more production than his most successful competitors.

He was recognized by the 50,000-member California Association of Realtors for first place for "Office Design and Layout" in 1965 and a first in 1966 for "Business Getting Devices."

While Congress just started requiring that all costs be disclosed to buyers in advance, Speraw was requiring his sales force to do so accurately in the '50s.

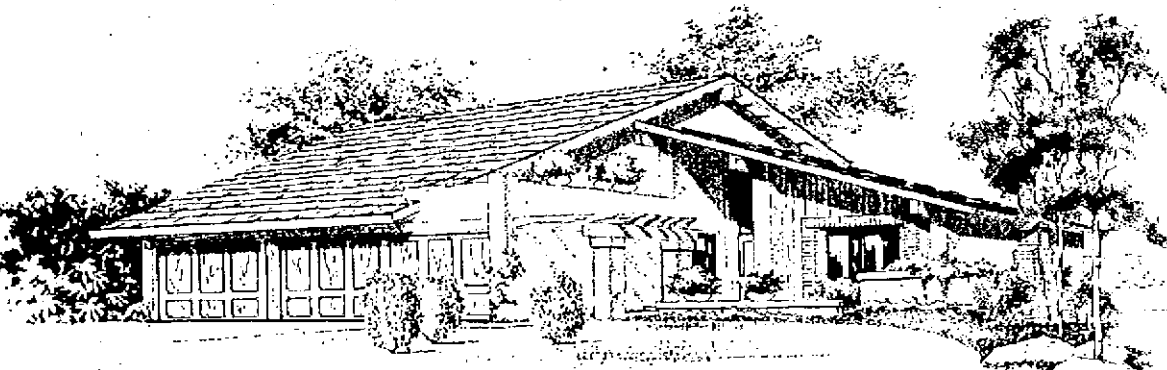

Then he recognized the need for franchising and his late '71-'72 decision tells the story today.

If you ask him "What's new?" generally he has good answers — most of the time a new one.

RURAL SETTING IN ORANGE CITY

La Linda offers patio lifestyle

ARTIST'S CONCEPT OF A LA LINDA PATIO-STYLE HOME IN CITY OF ORANGE

La Linda Homes officially has opened two new furnished models in the City of Orange. The community consists of 24 individual, patio-styled homes in a rural setting within walking distance of the Bullocks-Fashion Square shopping and financial complex. Although barely beyond the preview stage, and for sale just a few weeks, 15 of the 24 units have been sold.

The $1.5 million dollar, 6-acre, planned-unit development is being built by Orange County developer Richard Hall.

Although they are individual, detached homes, the patio-home concept will apply. All common properties will be maintained by a professional firm through a homeowners association for a monthly fee of approximately $35.

ALMOST ALL the one and two story homes feature a different exterior style that give the overall community a custom look, says Hall. Measuring in size from 1550 to approximately 2100 square feet, the units are available in four floor-plan arrangements. They contain three to five bedrooms, and two or three baths.

Architect for the firm was Roy Kiter and Associates, Newport Beach. Prices will range from $56,950 to $69,950, with conventional financing. Occupancy is planned by mid-February.

A leisure lifestyle will be provided residents in their own, huge 25 by 50 foot swimming pool, a recreation building, shuffleboard court and two huge professionally maintained park areas.

The community is accessible via a single entrance off Palmyra Street, west of Main Street. The homes are clustered architecturally in two oversized cul-de-sac streets. Huge palm, mature cedar, elm, podocarpus, pine and liquid amber trees were preserved in their natural state, creating a rural atmosphere. A decorative block wall along the Palmyra Street frontage will add privacy. Perimeter wood fencing will enclose the site.

Hall said this is the most complete family home he has built to date. Features included in the purchase price are carpeting in the living room, dining room, all bedrooms and hallways, draperies, central air conditioning, fireplaces, mirrored wardrobe doors, decorator wall paper, rear and side-yard fences, front-yard landscaping with sprinklers, deluxe equipped kitchens with trash compactors and Nutone food centers, sunken bathtubs and smoke detector systems.

"WITH ALL THESE FEATURES included, the purchaser may move in and begin enjoying complete luxury living immediately," Hall said. This package of features will practically eliminate after move-in costs the builder added.

Some plans feature wet bars, walk-in closets, and formal dining rooms. Three have built-in service and laundry rooms.

In addition to either two or three car garages, 21 additional open parking spaces are provided for residents, and/or guest parking.

Just five minutes away are the Santa Ana Freeway, Orange Freeway, Garden Grove Freeway and the Newport Freeway.

From the Santa Ana Freeway the project may be visited by exiting north on Main Street just beyond Bullocks to Palmyra and west two blocks to the site.

$1.5 million housing OK'd for Poly area

Shapell Government Housing, a major subsidiary of Shapell Industries, Inc., has been selected by the City of Long Beach to develop a government subsidized family housing project totaling $1.5 million.

With construction currently under way, the 78-unit family apartment complex is being built under the FHA 238 program subsidized by HUD.

Located in the Poly High Redevelopment Area, the family-oriented community will offer spacious one to three bedroom apartments, including distinctive studio designs in the three bedroom units.

With each apartment featuring a private balcony or patio, rents will start at $130.27 per month, including all utilities. The community also will feature extensive landscaping, volleyball and basketball courts, and laundry and storage facilities.

"We are very pleased to have been selected for the development of this project," stated Elliott Maltzman, president of Shapell Government Housing

Low move-in costs for townhomes

The "Buy-Centennial" starts today at Presidential Heights, Douglass-Pacific Corporation's view-site townhome community in prestigious South San Clemente, according to Alfred B. Osterhues, executive vice president of the building firm.

The unique home purchase plan, described as "a revolutionary way to buy a home," includes low move-in costs of just $1,176 (with approved credit).

THERE ARE just 64 of the new luxury townhomes to choose from at the popular hilltop community, Osterhues noted. Prices begin at $39,990 for the two and three bedroom homes with 1½ to 2½ baths.

Five distinctive floor plans are available in one and two story stylings of Spanish-textured stucco with massive wood beams and shake roofs. There are sheltered entry courtyards, private patios, atrium/patios and upper level balconies in various models.

Interiors feature outdoor-view living and dining areas, elegant master suites with cathedral ceilings, deluxe built-in kitchens, wall-to-wall carpeting and more luxuries throughout.

Some of the most spectacular views in the entire Presidential Heights community are available in the last group of homes being offered in the new "Hilltop Series," Osterhues noted.

More than half of the secluded development's 292 acres is devoted to open space, with a swimming pool provided for each cluster of homes and a total of 13 pools in the community. A private entrance is protected by a card-operated security gate.

The leisure-oriented, maintenance-free community is within minutes of ocean beaches and Dana Point Marina, shopping, schools and complete community services in San Clemente.

IMMEDIATE occupancy is now available and the homes are being offered with a special "10-Year Homeowner's Warranty Program" covering defects in workmanship or materials on such items as plumbing and electrical conduits. Presidential Heights is the first Orange County development to offer the insurance-type program.

Five furnished models are open daily from 10 a.m. at Presidential Heights and the development may be easily reached by taking the San Diego Freeway to the El Camino Real exit in San Clemente, then south to Avenida San Gabriel. Turn left and go four blocks to Presidential Heights.

BREA'S NEWEST PARK was officially opened with the sound of tearing paper as young Brea residents Jeff Stacy (left) and Lance La Forest went down the slide to break the banner held by (left to right) City Planning Commissioners Dick Bassey, John Sutton, and Ken Witt and builders Jim and Al Baldwin. Within the Brea North Hills residential development, the $53,000 park was built and paid for by The Baldwin Co. Jeff and Lance and their families live nearby, will be among the first residents in the new community.

Mini-park welcomed by Brea

Brea's newest park, an as yet unnamed mini-park on Woodcrest Avenue between Wardman Drive and Cedarcrest Drive, was officially opened recently by city officials and representatives of The Baldwin Co., the Irvine-based development firm that built the park.

Among those attending the informal ceremonies were Brea City Councilmen Rex Gaede and Carol Weddle; Planning Commissioners John Sutton, Ken Witt and Dick Bassey and Recreation and Parks Commissioner Gene Leyton. Also, participating were Al and Jim Baldwin, principals of The Baldwin Co., which is developing the adjacent residential Community of North Hills Tennis and Swim Club Homes.

Jim Baldwin stated: "Mini-parks serve an important community need, providing recreation which families can enjoy without having to get in their car and drive a distance."

The one-third acre park includes a large wooden tree-form jungle-gym, barbeques, and picnic tables. Built at the expense of The Baldwin Co., the park with its equipment and landscaping — is valued at over $53,000.

Brea North Hills is the first Orange County development of the Baldwin Co.

Architectural exhibit set up

A photographic exhibition of award-winning projects designed by architects affiliated with the Orange County Chapter of the American Institute of Architects will be on view at the Whittier office of Home Savings and Loan Association, 15625 E. Whittier Blvd., Feb. 16 through March 12.

First honor awards in the biennial competition, which attracted 84 entries, went to Bissell/August Associates for their 190 Building, Newport Center, and for designing Lido Village, also in Newport Beach. The 190 Building houses both a Home Savings branch and the Bissell/August offices.

The awards program, conducted by the Orange County Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture, honors architects for excellence in design of projects executed by chapter members only.

A PANEL OF THREE judges, outside the Orange County area, was reviewed by the entries. They were Daniel L. Dworsky, FAIA, recipient of 10 awards from the A.I.A., including a National Honor Award for the UCLA Multipurpose Track and Field Facility; Frank O. Gehry, F.A.I.A., current director of the A.I.A. in Washington D.C., and a member of the Committee on Design; and Deborah Sussman, acknowledged for her design of retail interior spaces.

Bissell/August took a First Honor Award for Lido Village, a waterfront, urban redevelopment project in Newport Beach, by the Don Koll Co. In this local haunt and tourist attraction, Bissell/August transformed nondescript commercial and apartment buildings into a sparkling shopping mall.

THE 190 BUILDING, recipient of the other first honor, houses Bissell/August's offices and is shared by Home Savings. Here, the design goal was economical efficiency, flexibility and environmental harmony.

On presenting the award, the judges' commented that the 190 Building is an example of a strong statement made without complexity. Both the interior and exterior of the architects' offices are award-winners.

Photographs of award of merit and honorable mention projects are included in the exhibition. Awards of merit were presented to Bissell/August for the 280 Building, in Newport Center, to Rolly Pulaski and Associates for the Cannery Restaurant; and to Bissell/August for the Coto de Casa Condominiums.

Two-day building meet set

Some of the West Coast's most knowledgeable building and real estate experts will spearhead a conference Feb. 19-20, sponsored by San Diego State University's Office of Continuing Education.

Cromwell has announced the lineup of experts will include John W. Creighton, vice president, The Weyerhaeuser Co., of Tacoma, Wash.; Bernard J. MacElhenny Jr., president of MacElhenny, Levy & Co., of Santa Barbara; William Mitchell, president, Market Profiles, Santa Ana; Sanford R. Goodkin, president, Sanford R. Goodkin Co.

Walker & Lee's home sales up

Paced by "spectacular" December sales gains, Walker & Lee, Inc., Anaheim-based real estate services firm, reports fourth quarter property sales "increased dramatically" over the preceding year.

"Our sales during the fourth quarter of 1975 increased 62 per cent in terms of units and 114 per cent in dollar volume over last year," announced William O. Thagard, president.

Property sales in the quarter totaled 2,103 transactions for $104.8 million, increases of 302 sales and $55.9 million. New and used home sales were up almost equal amounts, of 95 and 90 per cent, respectively.

"If last month is any indication of what 1976 will be like, we're really going to have a great year," Thagard observed. "Our December 1975 property sales dollar volume was up 317 per cent over the same month in '74. New home sales and resales leaped up almost identical percentages during the month."

Thagard stressed that all Walker & Lee sales figures are "net, after deducting cancellations."

In addition to property sales, Walker & Lee also provides residential research and consulting services and has escrow, mortgage, and insurance subsidiaries which show parallel increases.

Landmark deducts moving costs

The current $1000 allowance program in effect at La Mirada Landmark may be used in a number of ways, reports sales counselor Frank Randak.

He advised that the allowance or a portion of it could be applied toward the purchasers' moving costs. Randak has arranged with the Bekins Moving and Storage Co. to provide moving services to purchasers who decide to use their allowance that way. Details on this special program are available at the sales center.

To be continued on a limited time basis, purchasers in the second phase can still receive the allowance of $750 to $1,000 when purchasing a new home. The allowance also may be used to upgrade carpeting, add draperies, wardrobe mirrors, or may be applied toward the closing cost requirement.

Ninety units comprise this second unit and 30 are still available at 1975 prices that range from $35,950 to $47,950.

Major shopping complexes such as Whittwood, La Mirada Mall, and Fashion Square, health and medical centers, churches of all denominations, and numerous other employment and recreational opportunities are within a few minutes drive.

La Mirada also provides a unique energy saving service now being studied by other cities nationwide. This is the Dial-a-Ride mini-bus service which picks riders up at their doors and takes them anywhere in the city.

The security of residents is enhanced by a 24-hour-a-day security guard at the entrance to the project.

The entry is off Santa Gertrudes Street between Imperial Highway and Rosecrans Avenue. It may be reached from the Santa Ana Freeway by taking the Imperial Highway exit east to Santa Gertrudes and turning south.

La Mirada Landmark is a project of Glenwood Properties, Inc., which is owned by Signal Landmark Properties Inc., and Chevron Land Co.

The sales office and model complex are open daily from 10 a.m. for information phone (714) 521-2440 or (213) 947-2505.

Butler plans 550 single-family units

Another strong vote of confidence in the home-buying public was registered this week when Butler Housing Corp., the Irvine residential builder/developer, announced construction plans involving 550 single-family homes for 1976.

"We believe that the single-family market has returned," stated Merrill Butler Jr., president. "The overall market has bottomed-out, and with the start of 1976 construction and sales should really pick up. The trend is definitely toward the single-family market, especially well-designed homes in good locations.

"A NEW DILEMMA faces the industry," warned Butler. "The industry may not be able to meet the demands. With ever-increasing city and local requirements placed on the developers and the rising cost of labor, the building industry is going to have difficulty in delivering houses that the average family can afford."

Butler Housing plans to start 550 single-family homes during 1976. This includes additions to existing projects, as well as the start of six new developments.

Sales awards won by 6 at Warmington

Six Warmington Development, Inc. sales people, who together achieved total real estate sales of $24 million in 1975, are recipients of annual Million Dollar Awards from the Sales and Marketing Council, Building Industry Association of California.

The honorees, each of whom recorded $1 million or more in sales at various Warmington projects in Orange County, are Beth Elekes, Tom Clark, Robert Roeder, Larry Maurice, Gerald Malmberg and Chet Kruezel.

"We are extremely proud to have had so many of our staff members receive awards," Gene Barrow, marketing director for Warmington Development, said. "The Million Dollar Award program is an outstanding opportunity for sales people to gain well deserved recognition for their individual performances."

"With such activities, the Sales and Marketing Council creates incentives, a forum for meeting with colleagues and an opportunity for gaining an insight into the market," Barrow noted, "and Warmington Development supports their programs with enthusiasm."

Marketing meet slated

A two-day marketing session, open to the public and designed to create ideas and expose real estate investment properties to brokers and clients, is being offered by the investment division of the California Association of Realtors. The International Hotel, 1800 Palm Canyon Drive in Palm Springs, will be the site of the session Friday and Saturday, Feb. 13 and 14. Realtor Madge Davis of Newport Beach will be session director.

EASTRIDGE ESTATES HOME IN ITS RUSTIC SETTING

Eastridge Estates homes feature hilltop location

A spectacular hilltop location high above the championship Anaheim Hills Golf Course is the setting for Eastridge Estates, a new $5.6 million community of 87 luxury single-family residences at Serrano Avenue and Lake Summit Drive in Anaheim Hills, which has held its grand opening.

Phase I of Eastridge Estates, a group of 40 single and two-story homes with three to six bedrooms, is nearly completed and will be available for occupancy in February, according to Socaland Corp. of Tustin, builder of the new community.

Prior to the grand opening, 20 of the new Eastridge Estates homes had been sold and construction on the second phase is scheduled to begin this month.

Eastridge Estates offers seven floor plans in a price range of $84,550 to $79,900. Living space in the luxury dwellings spans 1,700 to 2,900 square feet. Lot sizes in the 26-acre Anaheim Hills neighborhood average 11,000 square feet.

Five professionally decorated models, named in honor of historical figures in a salute to the American Bicentennial, are open daily from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and weekends, 10 a.m. to dusk.

Eastridge Estates is located within the 4,200-acre master-planned Anaheim Hills, one of the West's most successful "new town" communities. In addition to the 18-hole golf course, the Anaheim Hills Racquet Club and forthcoming Equestrian Center provide unusual sports potential for the active family.

ANAHEIM HILLS also affords its residents five miles of riding and hiking trails as well as an oak-studded natural park.

Eastridge Estates complements the environmental aesthetics of the area with a large selection of 23 exterior elevations, cedar shake roofs or optional colored tile roofs, textured stucco accented with brick and extensive wood trim, concrete parking surfaces and walkways and underground utilities.

Luxury interior design appointments encompass step-down and step-up rooms; open volume, sloped ceilings in major rooms; wood-burning fireplaces with log lighters; formal dining areas; family rooms with sliding glass door patio access; and, in selected models, built-in wet bars.

Eastridge Estates kitchen conveniences include built-in microwave ovens, all-electric ovens and ranges, ceramic tile counters, recessed luminous ceilings, pantry cabinets, three-compartment cast-iron sinks, hardwood kitchen cabinets with sculptured doors and self-closing hinges, built-in water lines to refrigerators and sliding pass-thru windows to patio counter bars.

To visit Eastridge Estates, exit the Riverside Freeway at Imperial Highway, drive south to Nohl Ranch Road and east to Serrano Avenue and Lake Summit Drive.

What's Your Problem?

Points on house sale could help the seller

By DON CAMPBELL

Money moves in mysterious ways, and rarely more so than in the buying and selling of real estate where, in Washington, D.C., a string is pulled and the side-effects ripple out 3,000 miles to every corner of the land.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

I am about ready to sell my house and was encouraged last month when the government lowered the FHA and VA rates because I thought this would mean that "points" would be eliminated — which, as I understand it, I have to pay. Now, though, I find out that it doesn't mean that, at all. I still have to pay points, so I don't see any advantage at all for me in this. Am I right? — Mr. S. V. C., Hartford, Conn.

ANSWER: That's an unduly gloomy look at the situation, I think.

Like death and taxes, it seems like "points" are going to be with us forever as long as the government pegs FHA and VA mortgage interest rates at a lower level than those prevailing for conventional mortgages.

And, unlike the situation that prevails with conventional mortgages, it is the seller who must pay the lender these points — or discount — when the mortgage is closed. On conventional financing, that is, it's the buyer who pays the points.

What's a "point"? Essentially, it's one percentage point of the selling price of the house.

Its function is to close the gap (for the lender) between the maximum interest rate that the FHA and VA will allow on government-insured homes — recently lowered from 9 per cent to 8.75 per cent — and what the lender could get on his money financing the same home on the open market.

What the recent drop in FHA and VA rates did, then, was to raise the points from about two to three — or, in the case of a $36,000 home, from a lump-sum payment of $720 to about $1,170 on the part of the seller.

Now, as the seller, this means that you're either going to have to raise the asking price on your home to cover this point-spread, or simply absorb it. And, from this standpoint, you're right in assuming that the change in the rate structure didn't do you any good, at all — it could mean that you may be pricing your house out of the market.

But, on the other hand, it COULD work to your advantage by making financing available to would-be buyers who otherwise wouldn't be able to consider your house seriously. You've got to look at the bright side, too.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL:

Sometime ago you mentioned a "Home Owners Sales Kit" and gave the price and the address where it could be gotten. I sent away, but my envelope came back stamped "Unknown." Is this some kind of a rip-off? — Mr. W.F.T. (Hartford, Conn.)

ANSWER: There's certainly nothing, to my knowledge, that would suggest that it's a rip-off. It's more a case of having run up against an absent-minded professor.

The correct address is: "Home Owners Sales Kit," in care of Richard C. Vreeland, Box 91, Station A, Univ. of Southern Mississippi, Hattiesburg, Miss. 39401.

SHORT MOVE FOR FAMILY

Their 2nd Shadow Run home

La Palma residents Lou and Carolyn Einung and son Ronny have moved into their second Warmington Development, Inc., home, a new single-family residence in the company's Shadow Run community in La Palma.

Four years ago, the Einungs bought a town-home in Warmington's first Smoke Tree development in La Palma. Their recommendations also brought five other buyers to the community.

Since then, their property has appreciated 1 1/2 times in value, adding to the couple's satisfaction and pleasure in owning a Warmington home, according to Gene Barrow, director of marketing for the building firm (who also sold them their first home).

READY TO MOVE up to a larger, single family home, Lou and Carolyn selected the popular Shadow Run series recently introduced in a choice La Palma residential area not far from Smoke Tree.

Success of the Shadow Run series is attributed by the marketing director to the outstanding dollar value of the homes and their prime residential locations.

The new La Palma development is at Moody and La Palma Avenues and offers five distinctive one and two-story plans priced from $55,190 to $69,990.

The spacious family-oriented homes feature three or four bedrooms and two baths with from 1,506 to 2,403 square feet, available in 12 unique elevations.

SHADOW RUN homes feature an exclusive design concept that enables homeowners to enjoy family, formal or private living in separate sectors. Highlighting the

GENE BARROW, RIGHT, WELCOMES EINUNGS TO NEW HOME

Shadow Run lifestyle are custom-styled appointments and a long list of included features.

There are vaulted ceilings, massive fireplaces, open staircases and an abundance of sliding glass doors. Various plans have wet bars and extra large pantry areas, walk-in closets and huge finished bonus rooms.

Elegant master suites feature compartmented private baths and deluxe Shadow Run kitchens are fully built-in and include ceramic tile counter tops. There are block fenced rear yards, double garages and wall-to-wall shag carpeting among the luxury features.

Shadow Run is within walking distance of schools at all grade levels and just minutes from shopping, entertainment, recreational and medical facilities. The new Los Cerritos Mall regional shopping center is also nearby and easy freeway access provides fast commuting to all major Los Angeles and Orange County employment centers.

Four furnished model homes are on display at the Shadow Run central sales facility at 7012 Somerset Circle, La Palma, and open daily from 10 a.m. to dusk. The sales office may be reached by taking Freeway 91 to the Carmenita turnoff, south on Carmenita to Orangethorpe (South Street) and left one block to Shadow Run/La Palma.

Condominiums 2nd phase sales near completion

Just eight units remain in the second phase at Huntington Landmark, the director of sales, Bill Markas, reports.

For a limited time, selected units will be made available as Houses-of-the-week, and will include custom draperies at no increase in the 1975 purchase prices.

These choice second unit condominium homes are also available for immediate occupancy. Prices are $32,990 and $33,990. The units contain two bedrooms, two full baths, formal dining area and large living room. A huge walk-in closet is also included off the master bedroom.

One hundred-eighty units comprise this second building phase at Huntington Landmark. Conventional financing is offered.

Each Huntington Landmark unit is allocated an enclosed garage with built in storage, as well as an additional parking space.

THE SALES PRICES include shag wall-to-wall carpeting in the living room, bedrooms and hallway, and efficient forced air heating. Other features are walk-in closets, deluxe equipped all-electric kitchens, and utility rooms within each unit that include washer-dryer.

A variety of recreational services are available at Huntington Landmark, and center around the million dollar recreation center. Facilities for social activities are provided in a large clubhouse that features dining card rooms, a billiard room, art studio, photo lab, pottery and wood shops and all purpose rooms.

THE CONDOMINIUM concept of carefree living is provided, with exterior maintenance, landscaping and care of the greenbelts and recreational facilities provided by a professional firm retained by the homeowner's association. The community has a 24-hour security guarded entrance.

New models are located on Magnolia Street just north of Atlanta Avenue. The sales center for phase 3 is open daily from 10 a.m., and information may be obtained by calling (714) 536-8847.

IP-T GRAND PRIX RACE GAME

Solve the daily puzzles in your next Monday thru Friday Independent Press-Telegram to compete for a share of $600 WEEKLY CASH PRIZES

Here's how to win:

The entry form to the right indicates the names of 30 race cars and their car numbers. What you must do is determine which cars will finish this week's race in first thru tenth place and indicate the car numbers on the entry form. To do this you will need to solve ten word puzzles that will appear daily in these newspapers, next Monday thru Friday. Each puzzle will show the finishing place of a car, the number of letters in that car's name plus the positioning of one or more of those letters. You fill in the blanks to discover the car's name. While some puzzles may appear to have more than one answer, when all ten are completed there will be only one correct solution. No car's name will be used more than once in this race.

NOTE: Indicate the race number you are entering on the outside of your envelope!

A NEW RACE BEGINS EACH SUNDAY!

TELEVISION LOG OF THE INDEPENDENT-PRESS-TELEGRAM AND THE EVENING NEWS

Nick Nolte knocks 'em dead in hard-hitting role

By BOB MARTIN
TV-Radio Editor

Nick Nolte, a relative newcomer to television, entered the homes of millions of Americans last Sunday and Monday nights with all the impact of a powerful uppercut to the jaw.

In ABC's nine-part, 12-hour "Rich Man, Poor Man" series, based on Irwin Shaw's best-selling novel, Nick is the "poor man" — a loser. But the drama is sure to make him a winner. It could, in fact, make him a major star.

After the first two episodes of two hours each had aired, Nolle was in the office of Hollywood publicist Frank Liberman last Tuesday. Phone calls were coming in from all over — from newspaper people, producers and what have you. One was from noted director Francis Ford Coppola, who asked Nick to drop by that afternoon to talk about a role in his Vietnam War epic motion picture "Apocalypse Now."

Of course, the young actor couldn't pass up an invitation like that, but all he had really wanted to do that day was to go ice skating for several hours. Why ice skating? Well, he has been offered a part in a Paul Newman movie about hockey, tentatively titled "Slapshot," and he wants to get in shape.

"I never played hockey and if I can't look like a hockey star I don't want the part," Nick told me between phone calls. Newman will play the hockey team's coach in the film to be directed by George Roy Hill.

AFTER FINISHING one phone call, the blond, blue-eyed actor took one from a newspaper woman in Ames, Iowa. Nick, it seems, lived both in Ames and Waterloo, Iowa, for a few years as a boy. He was born in Omaha and finished high school there, but in between he lived several other places, including even California.

"We moved around a lot — my father was a salesman," he said.

Nick took time to have lunch with Liberman and me at a Hamburger Hamlet, which was just a short walk from the publicity man's Sunset Boulevard office. He was tousle-haired and needed a shave, and was dressed more for working on his five-acre ranch between Malibu and Ventura (purchased from his "Rich Man" earnings) than for giving the appearance of a TV star.

He was heavier, too, and looked older, with his blond mustache, than he did in the first two episodes of "Rich Man, Poor Man," as clean-shaven teenager Tom Jordache.

"I had to get down to about 165 pounds to look more youthful at the beginning of the picture," said the rugged 6-footer. "Then I put on weight and got up to 190 as I matured over a 20-year period. Luckily, the episodes were shot in sequence."

The actor, whose normal weight is around 175, limited himself to a cheeseburger, French fries and Coke for lunch.

He is, he pointed out, 35 years of age — which no doubt will surprise a lot of viewers, for he certainly can look much younger.

NOLTE, Peter Strauss (as his older brother, Rudy Jordache) and Susan Blakely, as Julie Prescott, a character encompassing several women in the novel, are the principals in the TV miniseries, which follows their lives from V-E Day in 1945 to the mid-sixties.

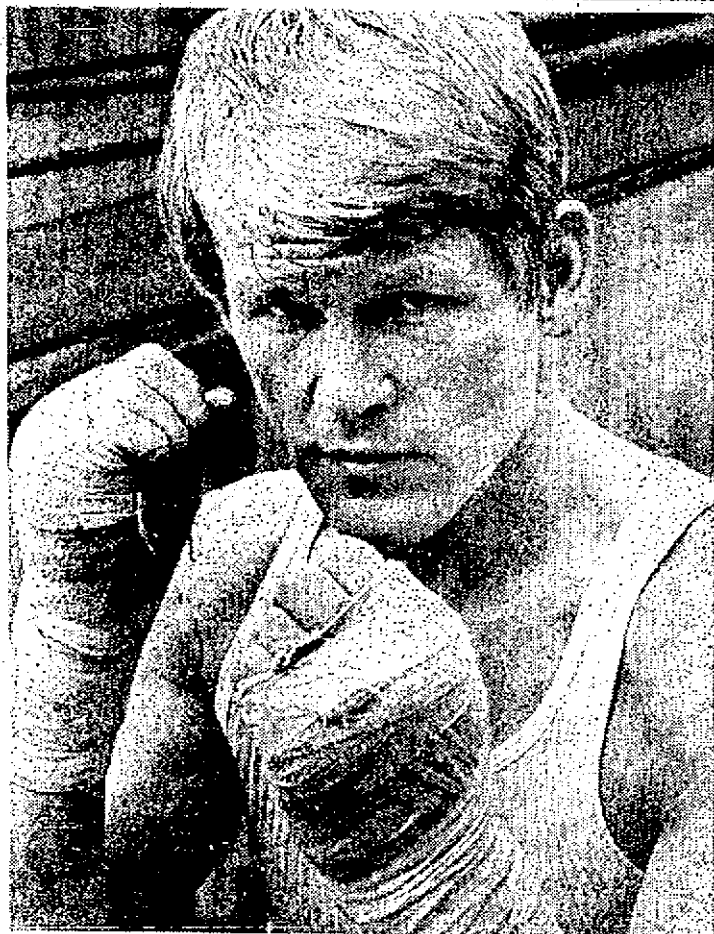

Rudy is scholarly, ambitious, dedicated, the favorite of his immigrant parents (played by Edward Asner and Dorothy McGuire). He goes from high school on to college and business and politics. He's the "rich man."

Nolte's Tom, on the other hand, is a rebellious, tough, independent, fun-loving fellow who feels unloved by his parents — a woman-chasing, two-fisted guy whose temper sometimes leads to violence.

In the first two episodes, at least, Tom Jordache had all the fun, and, Nolte admitted, the trouble-making but likable Tom was apt to appeal to more viewers than the strait-laced Rudy.

There's a scene in the first episode in which Nolte gets in a fight with Dick Butkus, the former great linebacker of pro football. It is a tribute to Nolte's acting ability and to his athletic appearance that it doesn't seem phony when he whips the big guy.

"You know, that part was supposed to go to Larry Csonka (another pro football star)," Nick told me, "but he didn't want it if he couldn't win the fight."

NICK NOLTE . . . stars in 'Rich Man, Poor Man'

TOM JORDACHE also set a fire, slugged his bitter father and was kicked out of town in the first episode. In the second episode, he had some tender love scenes with the attractive Irish housekeeper (Fionnuala Flanagan) at his uncle's home in California, thereby getting in trouble with the uncle. He also was jailed on a statutory rape charge after getting a teen-aged girl named Teresa (Talia Shire) pregnant.

In the third episode, which will air from 10 to 11 p.m. Monday on Channel 7, Tom is lured into marriage by Teresa, has a son by her, and launches a promising career as a prizefighter. But later in the series, after Teresa has left him, Tom hits bottom and eventually moves to France, only to be overtaken, in the end, by violence. Rudy, meanwhile, has graduated from college and is moving up the business ladder.

Nolte was an all-around athlete in high school at Omaha, lettering in football, basketball, baseball, track and wrestling. His late father, Frank Nolte, was a star tackle for the Iowa State Cyclones in the mid-1930s. As a youth, Nick's goal was to be a professional athlete, and football ("I played defensive end and some quarterback and punted and kicked off") took him to Eastern Arizona Junior College, Pasadena City College and Arizona State.

Finally, he said, it dawned on him that he wasn't going to make it as a pro football player — "that maybe I was a step too slow." So he turned to the study of acting at Phoenix City College and Colorado State and with theater groups.

"Did acting come naturally to you?" I inquired.

Replied Nick: "It seemed right for me, somehow, from the start."

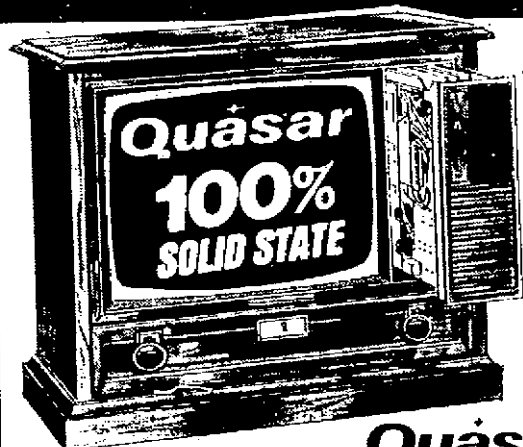

FROM 1962 to 1972, he performed in more than 150 plays in regional theaters from Arizona to Colorado to Minnesota to Illinois to New York to California. In the last few years, he has had guest roles on a number of TV series and has appeared in five theatrical motion pictures, starring in one of them — "Return to Macon County" — in 1975.

His annual income during some of his years in regional theater was only about $6,000, said Nolte, who is single but says he has "been living with the same girl about six years."

Things are looking up now, though. The poor man of "Rich Man" seems to have hit it big.

'You can't please everyone,' says network's censor

By MARILYNN PRESTON
Chicago Tribune

Johnny Carson calls him Priscilla Goodbody. He is the NBC censor, the network vice president in charge of broadcast standards, and at a screening of "Barry Lyndon" the other night he was the only one counting up all the dirty parts.

He is the tastemaker general, the man who edited the breasts out of "The Godfather" but left them in on a recent "Today" show.

And if you want to complain — if you think the broom-rape in "Born Innocent" was too much and the family hour too little, if you enjoy Carson's filthy innuendoes but think "Saturday Night" makes too much fun of the handicapped, if you're tired of watching obscene violence and prefer obscene sex — Herminio Travesas is the man to see.

I SAW HIM the other day when he was in town to talk to the Chicago TV Academy about how tough it is to be a creative editor, a term he much prefers to censor, which connotes something evil, negative and certainly repressive.

Untrue, says the 61-year-old broadcast veteran that Newsweek calls the "cherubic dean" of the censors and everyone else calls just plain Travvy.

"Let's face it — I have a tough job," he said. "When people sit there and ask me by what right do I play God, that really shakes me up. But if I've learned anything after 37 years in the business, it's that I can't win. I've got to go with my gut instinct and I can't please everyone."

RIGHT NOW, Travesas and his fellow keepers of the bleepers at the other networks are very much displeasing the creative forces who work on television and claim the family hour is foolish, unfair, unconstitutional and probably responsible for the reported 5 per cent decline in adult prime-time viewers.

Travesas says he can't specifically discuss any of those charges because he is involved in the federal suit pending against the networks, but he did want to make perfectly clear that NBC is solidly behind the family hour, and so is he. And so, in his opinion, are the majority of people in the country.

"Now a lot of people may disagree with me," says the man of strict Presbyterian upbringing (who first mouthed the now-famous phrase that NBC would never have "frontal, backal or sidal nudity"), "but I sincerely believe that the country is still basically puritanical."

HOW DOES he know? He just knows. He listens to his station managers and his staff of 40 who try to keep in touch with the hinterlands, and, most of all, he keeps track of the mail.

But, surprisingly enough, it appears to take very small amounts of mail to persuade him, in spite of the fact that the millions of people who accept a certain show rarely write while the vocal minority with complaints frequently do.

In one case, Travesas says, it took just one intelligent letter by a woman married to a man named Bruce to convince him NBC should stop using Bruce as the all-purpose name to connote a homosexual.

"If they needed a name, I told them to use Herminio," he said.

ANOTHER time 100 callers, upset about Henry Fonda saying "damn" three times in the first reel of "Red Pony," got Travesas to set an arbitrary rule that there should be no "hells" or "damns" in the first 15 minutes of a program.

"At NBC, we're generally very conservative and we take an especially tough line on the use of language — especially the hard, crude, four-letter words. That's man talk. I wouldn't use it in mixed company and I don't think the country wants it in their homes."

Violence is another story. "The public really likes those action shows," says Travesas, who diplomatically agrees there are too many on the air but predicts a trend toward old-fashioned variety shows coming up soon. "At NBC, we are very

Television has come long way in 50 years

By ED BLANCHE
LONDON UP — Television had its 50th birthday recently, having come a long way from an outlandish contraption made of knitting needles, tin cans and cardboard held together by sealing wax and glue.

A half-century ago, John Logie Baird, a shock-haired Scotsman, astounded 40 eminent scientists on a wintry London night with the first public demonstration of his "televisor."

They watched fascinated as "a faint and often blurred" image of the head of a ventriloquist's dummy called "Bill" fluttered on a crude screen in the inventor's laboratory in the sleazy Sobo district.

The picture of the dummy's head impaled on a stick was transmitted from one room to another in Baird's second-floor laboratory on a weird machine made largely of ordinary household items and a spinning disc.

AT ABOUT the same time in the United States, an Ohio-born inventor named Charles Francis Jenkins was also beginning the transmission of crude black and white silhouettes. Jenkins continued his work with a number of broadcasting companies until his death in 1934; but history books give Baird most of the credit for the invention of television.

British journalist Bill Fox, 86, who was closely associated with Baird and witnessed the first demonstration, recalled that the transmission caused a vibrating hum that "went right through my head."

The first person to appear on television was an 18-year-old office boy, William Tayton. Baird persuaded him to sit before the crude mechanical camera soon after the first public demonstration.

FOX, WHO witnessed that event, said: "I saw a face, but the picture was very crude. The boy had a cigarette in his mouth, but I could see it on a small frame about two inches by three."

Fox later participated in Baird's experiments and became the first face to be transmitted across the Atlantic to New York in 1928.

"I sat on a chair beneath 1,000-watt lamps. It was very hot. I sat rigid. Then I heard Baird shout: 'Move, speak, say anything,'" he said.

"At that moment my concerned with gratuitous violence."

THE NETWORK'S concern doesn't keep violence off the air, it just cleans it up. At NBC, for instance, you won't ever actually see the knife sliding into the man's gut. You can kick a man when he's down, but not 30 or 40 times. No one can be killed twice: that is, shot first, and then thrown out of a plane, for instance.

Personally, Traviesas thinks that sanitized violence is, in itself, a problem because it doesn't show the horror of the act, or the consequences.

But still he believes — perhaps using the same gut intuition that tells him 20th Century America isn't ready for a single "hell" or "damn" in the TV version of "Rachel, Rachel" — that death and killing are much more palatable to the people (and, we assume, his own NBC bosses) than realistic sex.

"PERSONALLY, I think the more honest sex, the healthier. But you have to recognize what the human body is all about. It should be treated with dignity. Sex is a God-given thing, and it should be treated as something beautiful and not for erotic pleasure."

Not even on daytime TV, where everything is talked about but nothing actually shown; and not even on Johnny Carson, who gets away with murder; and not even on the most exciting, innovative, and patently outrageous show to hit the airwaves, NBC's "Saturday Night."

"DON'T THINK that show doesn't worry me," says Traviesas, who sprouts at least seven new gray hairs every time Chevy Chase makes some wonderful remark just bordering on the lewd and tasteless. On one hand, he's proud of the show, just as he's proud of his association with another innovative groundbreaker, "Laugh-In," but on the other hand he's extremely reluctant to push too hard, too fast.

ABC going after star personalities

By LEE MARGULIES
Associated Press
William S. Paley built CBS into the No. 1 television network on the theory that stars were the most important ingredient of successful programming. And CBS still advertises itself as the place to "catch the brightest star."

Now ABC-TV has launched a major campaign to make that formula work for it. "Television is a personality medium," says Michael D. Eisner, vice president for program planning and development at ABC. He says that philosophy is being applied to the development of all new projects.

have Robert Blake in a series than it is to have a series about a cop who wears disguises and works with the low life of his city ("Baretta").

So ABC, hoping to become what Eisner terms the "personality network," is aggressively seeking out established stars to sign contracts agreeing to make a series pilot for the network.

That way, instead of waiting for someone to come to them with an idea for a series and then looking around on short notice for an actor who fits the leading role, ABC can go to an independent producer and commission on a series proposal tailored to the personality of the individual star.

"Meaning," Eisner explained, "that the concept of a series is important, yes; the writing is important, the directing — but because television as a medium is a guest in your home, the people in it become the most important element, whether it's a daytime serial or a nighttime drama."

"IN OTHER words, it's more important for us to

ROBERT BLAKE, star of the ABC detective series "Baretta," sometimes is upstaged by Fred the Cockatoo, his house pet in the series.

Jimmie Walker (of "Good Times"), Andy Griffith, Eva Marie Saint, Gregory Sierra (of "Barney Miller"), Rita Moreno and Harold Gould.

There's another aspect of the ABC talent hunt which stems from the knowledge that television can turn unknowns like Jimmie Walker and Henry Winkler (of "Happy Days") into stars overnight.

Pam Dixon, the network's 28-year-old vice president of talent for comedy and drama programs, is working with a $500,000 budget to find and sign performers who either are new to show business or are experienced but have little exposure on television, as was once the case with such TV stars as Carroll O'Connor, Valerie Harper and Redd Foxx.

MISS DIXON puts these newcomers on retainer for up to one year, forming a talent pool that ABC can tap for leading and supporting roles whenever a new series is being developed.

One performer who has benefited from this program already, says Eisner, is Penny Marshall. She's now the star of ABC's "Laverne and Shirley."

BONNIE FRANKLIN stars as Ann Romano in the comedy series "One Day at a Time," on Ch. 2 at 9:30 p.m. Tuesday.

WICHITA, Kan. — Some days, being a big-time entertainer isn't all that easy.

Comedian David Brenner arrived in Wichita on a recent afternoon for an 8 p.m. concert. The lanky 30-year-old funnyman immediately fell into bed at his hotel suite.

Five hours later, he was in his working clothes — a nondescript off-white crew neck sweater, jeans and boots — and shooting off sparks.

He's long on talent, short on sleep. "I've been on tour for a few months, playing concerts and one-nighters," he said. "Seems I'm always catching a 7 a.m. plane. I usually get back to the hotel after a show about 1:30 a.m. I can't get to sleep until 3 o'clock or 3:30."

THAT'S ONLY part of it. An ailing architect or bank president can stay home. The entertainer has to go on. Brenner once did a show while suffering a 104-degree temperature, then collapsed offstage.

DAVID BRENNER

He worked three months with a pinched nerve at the base of his spine. The teetotaler didn't take a drink to ease the pain. "It dulls the brain," he explained. "Your mind has to be crystal clear."

The South Philadelphia native blazed onto the national scene in January 1971. He credits Johnny Carson with giving him his break. Last month, he made his 41st appearance on "The Tonight Show."

HE CREATES his own material from what he sees and hears. He never writes it down.

"Every line I do originally was an ad lib," he said. "I saw a sign yesterday. I hope it's funny. It said, 'Quality furniture since 1920.' What did he have? Lousy furniture before that?"

A post office sign warns that no dogs are permitted except seeing eye dogs. During one "Tonight Show" spot, he asked, "Who's gonna see it?"

The joke had been OK'd by a blind man.

"IF IT'S a religious joke, I check with priests," Brenner said. "If one person doesn't like it, I take it out. I've told the seeing eye joke to blind groups. They laugh."

His brash humor has made him a Las Vegas headliner at the Sahara and Caesars Palace.

Is he married? "Hell,

no. It isn't the life for a woman. Besides, I like being a bachelor. Only thing dumber than being married in New York is to be a farmer there."

HE DATES models, he said, because he likes

their looks.

"The only thing that's changed is—it's easier to meet girls," he said. "I've never been shy. Always had a big mouth. But before, I really had to talk fast."

It was virtually preordained that he take his fling at show business. "My father, Lou Brenner, was a vaudeville comedian," he said. "He's the funniest man. And the best."

CRITICS' CORNER

By DICK SHIPPY
Knight Newspapers
Television's family hour formula of something-old-something-new-something-borrowed-and-nothing-blue

now has resulted in "Laverne and Shirley," an ABC situation comedy
which — heaven help us —

probably will become a ratings hit.

I'm guessing it will command a loyal following because ... well, because it's completely childish (or should we say thoroughly juvenile?); and you don't have to look any farther than "Happy Days," which precedes
"Laverne and Shirley" on the network's Tuesday
schedule, to know that childishness is a hot commodity.

Indeed, "Laverne and Shirley" is a spinoff from
"Happy Days," and just to be sure you'd make the connection, Arthur Fon-zarelli (or the Fonz, or Henry Winkler, if you will)
was spread around like an ointment on the first episode, which was No. 1 in the national Nielsen ratings for the week ending
Feb. 1.

Of course, "Happy Days" itself is a sort of spinoff, being a de-sensi-
tized version of the popular film "American Graffiti." That's the way it works on television: the breeding produces the dim-witted.

BUT SHOWS like
"Happy Days" and "Laverne and Shirley" are not structured to supply wit.
They are cartoons in which the inane horseplay
of frivolous characters (who are not really characters but stick figures) is supposed to entertain us because it recalls another time when things were not SO unhappily
complex, when life WAS
as giddy as a situation
comedy. In other words,
here is nostalgia for
numb skulls.

All right, let's be nostalgic about those working class stiff of the dear, departed fifties (about 1959, one judges). None of this middle class jive for Laverne de Fazio and Shirley Feeney. They may not be very ethnic, but they're certainly lower class. Just one step up the evolutionary scale from the baboon.

Ten years ago they were scrawling endearments in each other's high school yearbooks ("Pepsi-Cola hits the spot" being a sample of their eloquence), but now Laverne and Shirley are working in the bottling room of a Milwaukee brewery, the home of Sholtz beer (the owner of the brewery is "the big Sholtz," naturally).

LAVERNE and Shirley share a dingy basement apartment. They also share leisure-time activities like visits to pizza parlors or corner saloons
where they are accosted
by cheerful, blue-jeaned
and T-shirted louts who

liams star in "Laverne and Shirley" as working girls employed in a Milwaukee brewery. The new comedy series, which led the national Nielsen ratings with its premiere, airs on Ch. 7 at 8:30 p.m.
Tuesdays.

say, "There's a great makeout movie playing at the drive-in ... It's 'The Robe.'"

Understand, this, alone,
does not establish the lower class attitudes of Misses De Fazio and Fee-neey. Anybody can fall into bad habits and bad
company; in fact, upper class morality permits
such back-sliding.

But television is particularly thorough in defining its class distinctions. If the big Sholtz' nephew, who is working at the brewery to learn the ways of business
and of the peasant folk,
should invite Laverne and Shirley to a dinner party,
then Laverne will finger
the engraved invitation

with a mixture of awe and astonishment, and will tell her friend, "Hey, feel this invitation — it's got BUMPS!"

AND IF the Sholtz
manor house should contain a bust of the family
matriarch, Laverne will examine this marvel and exclaim, "Gee, I never saw an INSIDE statue!"

And, of course, the Sholtzes' uppity dinner guests will sniff the air
around Laverne and Shirley and will be exquisitely despicable until garage
mechanic Arthur Fonzarelli
will arrive to rescue
the maidens dense and will singe the edges of the upper crust — and this is class-consciousness right out of comic books. Now, do you know why it can't miss?

BY THE WAY, this added fluff is to be introduced weekly with scenes of Laverne and Shirley
skittering about Milwaukee streets, sing-songing
their determination to make it their way and finally stopping to pose on a brewery forklift.

It might also be mentioned Penny Marshall
(she's Laverne) is sister to Gerry Marshall, who is executive producer of the series and who co-wrote
and directed the first episode (he was involved with
"Happy Days," too), and Cindy Williams (she's Shirley) appeared in
"American Graffiti,"
wherein she was Ronnie
Howard's girl friend, and Ronnie now is one of the stars of "Happy Days,"
and Henry Winkler (the Fonz) will be in more episodes of L-and-S. — and what were we saying about in-breeding!

face was being transmitted across the Atlantic. A friend in New York watching the receiver recognized me. I said something, although they couldn't hear me in New York. But the dumb show was to prove that the picture was really of a living person."

AFTER THAT triumph, Baird told Fox: "I think I can do color."

His optimism was never rewarded, and his system was never used by the British Broadcasting Corp. The BBC started the first regular television program, confined to the London area, in 1936, using the electronic system. Baird's system was partly mechanical, using the spinning disc to transmit pictures.

Baird did produce color transmissions, but the company he set up foundered a few years later. Baird died in 1946, just as commercial television was getting off the ground. He left an estate of $16,800, a poor return for what became a billion-dollar industry around the world.

A theoretical system had been patented in Germany in 1884 and the cathode ray tube, the heart of a modern television set, was known as early as 1908. But Baird's "pictures by wireless" system and his development of it was the big breakthrough.

'Sandburg's Lincoln' final segment set

"The Last Days," sixth and final segment of the "Sandburg's Lincoln" series of specials starring Hal Holbrook and Sada Thompson, has been set to air April 14 over NBC-TV. The date marks the 111th anniversary of Lincoln's assassination.

THE BIG DIFFERENCE IN SECOND TRUST DEED LOANS:

12.88%
RELIABLE'S ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE — 8 YRS.

17%-21%
OTHER'S TYPICAL ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE — 3 TO 5 YRS.

Not all second trust deed loans cost the same. That's why the Federal Government has given you a simple way of comparing the annual cost of any loan . . . the Annual Percentage Rate. The lower this rate, the lower your annual cost.

Most other companies ask you to pay Annual Percentage Rates from 17% to 21%. That's because they charge you 10% interest, a maximum commission and give you a short time to repay. Not us. Our interest rate is lower (9%), our commission is lower, and we give you more time — 8 years — to fully repay your loan, including principal and interest. There are no balloon payments. We offer you an Annual Percentage Rate of 12.88%. Check around. We believe it's the best rate available.

The figures look like this. For every $1,000 you borrow you pay only $14.66 a month. The total of payments is $1,407.36. You can choose a shorter term loan at a proportionately higher Annual Percentage Rate. Naturally, you can pay off your loan at any time by paying interest on the balance in accordance with state law.

You may borrow from $1,000 to $50,000 on a first or second trust deed loan — on any real estate anywhere in California. On the average, you'll have your loan in 10 days.

No gimmicks. No double-talk. We just think it's good business to give you the facts . . . and more money for your money.

Need a loan? Be a man about it.

The American woman. A lot of things have changed. Except her financial status. Why is it so difficult for her to buy a house? Does she still need a co-signer to buy a car? And how come her credit cards still have her husband's name on them?

Find out tonight. As John Hambrick looks into the American woman's pocketbook...and many other aspects of her life today.

The BIBLE Says

GOD'S SCHEME OF REDEMPTION NO. 6

Understanding that there are two parties involved in God's Scheme of Redemption (God's grace and Man's obedient faith) we examined Acts chapter 2 last week and found that God's grace provided a plan; and man is responsible for obedience to that plan that he might be saved, (Heb. 5:9).

Acts Chapter Eight

There are two accounts of conversion in Acts chapter 8. The first is the conversion of the people of Samaria. The Scriptures teach that Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them. Now, what does it mean to preach Christ? Well, since there is no record of his sermon, we can know only by what those of Samaria believed. Acts 8:12 says, "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." We conclude from this that Philip preached things concerning the kingdom of God, the name (or authority) of Christ, and baptism — else how could these people have believed these things at Philip's preaching? Thus, we can readily see that Philip followed the instructions of Christ when Christ told his disciples to "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15-16).

Also, in Acts 8:30-39 we read where Philip was instructed by the Spirit to go preach to a man from Ethiopia. He believed Philip's teaching and when they came to a certain water the man said, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." Thus, God's grace provided the very same plan for every person in the New Testament. It worked for them, for when they had obeyed it, they went on their way rejoicing. We can go on our way rejoicing today — but not until we have obeyed the same things that these obeyed in Acts chapters 2 and 8.

WALTER SCOTT'S Personality Parade

Want the facts? Want to learn the truth about prominent personalities? Want informed opinion? Write Walter Scott, Parade, 733 3rd Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Your full name will be used unless otherwise requested. Volume of mail received makes personal replies impossible.

Q. Former South Vietnam President Thieu seems to have disappeared from Earth. Where has he gone to? —Carl Pritchard, Fayetteville, N.C.

A. On Sept. 20, 1975, Thieu arrived in London, stayed for a while with his niece and her husband, Dr. Michael Dang, in Worcester Park, a suburb of West London. His six-month visa expires next month. The British Foreign Office will undoubtedly extend it and may even provide Thieu with British citizenship if he applies for it.

BARBRA STREISAND

Q. Are there any women on the annual list of the 10 top box-office film stars? —Esther Davis, Miami Beach, Fla.

A. The 1975 list shows Robert Redford No. 1, Barbra Streisand, only actress on the list, No. 2, followed by Al Pacino (3), Charles Bronson (4), Paul Newman (5), Clint Eastwood (6), Burt Reynolds (7), Woody Allen (8), Steve McQueen (9), Gene Hackman (10).

Q. I keep reading in the papers that Henry Kissinger's days as Secretary of State are numbered. Is this true? Does Ford plan to dump Kissinger and replace him with Elliot Richardson? —Peter Norton, Baltimore, Md.

A. Kissinger has been around a relatively long time—since 1969. In that time he has acquired many admirers, also many enemies, especially in Congress where he is not completely trusted because of his doubletalk. President Ford insists that Kissinger enjoys "my full and complete support." But the evidence is incontrovertible that Kissinger's influence on Ford is waning. Two of Ford's closest advisers, Mel Laird of the "Reader's Digest" and Don Rumsfeld, Secretary of Defense, are strong supporters of Elliot Richardson, who is merely killing time as Secretary of Commerce. Henry will probably last through the year, with luck.

Q. George Bush, new director of the CIA—is he finished with political life? —F.L. Owens, Dallas, Tex.

A. Not by any means. Bush has said publicly that he plans to return to political life after he completes a tour of duty at CIA. How long that will last is problematical—perhaps one year, surely no more than two.

JERRY BROWN

CANDY BERGEN

Q. Was Gov. Jerry Brown of California ever deeply in love with Candy Bergen? Didn't she once live with Terry Melcher, son of Doris Day? —Helen Connolly, Roxbury, Mass.

A. Brown used to date Candy Bergen, who at one time lived with record producer Terry Melcher.

Q. Henry Winkler of the "Happy Days" TV show—did he recently die in an automobile accident? —G.F. and D.H., Chittenango, N.Y.

A. Henry Winkler is alive and well.

Q. Whatever happened to the mother of King Farouk, Egypt's last ruling monarch? I understand she had one of the most fabulous jewelry collections in the world. —Nedda Cohen, New York City.

A. Nazli Fouad, mother of the late king and a former queen of Egypt herself, lives sedately in Beverly Hills, Cal., recently sold approximately $500,000 worth of jewels in order to live.

Q. I wonder if you can tell me what basic foreign language is taught to the children in Communist East Germany? —Henry Coleman, Raleigh, N.C.

A. Children in East Germany must study a foreign language from the age of 11 to 16. It is compulsory, and the basic compulsory foreign language is Russian, which in special schools is taught to students from age 8 to 16. The second most popular foreign language is English.

Q. When Elvis Presley performs is it part of his act to have his white pants split because they're too tight on purpose? —Lela Jones, Hot Springs, Ark.

A. The seemingly accidental pants-splitting has become so frequent that it's now considered part of the Presley performance.

Q. When Gerald Ford was a Congressman he urged the appointment to the U.S. Supreme Court of such right-wingers as Haynesworth and Carswell. How come when he became President, Ford chose a moderate like John Paul Stevens? —D.L.L., Evanston, Ill.

A. Ford chose John Paul Stevens to replace Justice William Douglas on the Supreme Court because he knew full well that a Democratic Congress would never confirm a right-wing ideologue. He knew, too, that Stevens was a centrist and a jurist of unblemished reputation and superb qualifications. Stevens and Sen. Charles Percy (R., Ill.) were classmates at the University of Chicago, and Percy strongly recommended the appointment.

BARBARA JORDAN

Q. Barbara Jordan, a black Congresswoman from Texas, is an impressive speaker and a clear thinker—but is it true that she is owned by the Texas oil lobby? —A.L., Austin, Tex.

A. Congresswoman Jordan would like to be U.S. Senator from Texas one day, undoubtedly realizes she needs the support of the Texas oil magnates, which is why one will not find her voting against the oil companies.

Q. Mstislav Rostropovich, the great Russian cellist—is he returning to the Soviet Union or is he renouncing his Soviet citizenship to remain in this country? —D.L., Washington, D.C.

A. Rostropovich says that when his two-year exit visa from the Soviet Union expires next spring, he will apply for an extension. He wants to retain his Soviet citizenship. If the Soviets refuse, Rostropovich, who will be chief conductor of the Washington National Symphony in 1977-78, will probably remain in this country indefinitely.

Q. The hot film star of 1976 is supposed to be actor Robert De Niro. He stars in "The Last Tycoon," in "Taxi Driver," and, of course, he was in "The Godfather Part II." My question: Isn't De Niro married to a black actress, Diana Abbott? —Claire T., New York City.

A. De Niro is not married to black actress Diana Abbott. She is, however, his close and good friend, as is her 8-year-old daughter.

Best of all, the ten you choose now are all yours for only $1.00.

To order your 10 records or tapes just mail the application in an envelope, together with your check or money order for $1.00 as payment. In exchange, you agree to buy 8 more selections (at regular Club prices) in the coming three years...and you may cancel your membership at any time after doing so.

How the Club operates: every four weeks (13 times a year) you'll receive the Club's music magazine, which describes the Selection of the Month for each musical interest...plus hundreds of alternates from every field of music. In addition, up to six times a year you may receive offers of Special Selections, usually at a discount off the regular Club prices.

If you wish to receive the Selection of the Month or the Special Selection, you need do nothing—it will be shipped automatically. If you prefer an alternate selection, or none at all, simply fill in the response card always provided and mail it by the date specified.

You will always have at least 10 days in which to make your decision. If you ever receive any Selection without having had at least 10 days in which to decide, you may return it at our expense, for full credit.

Your own charge account will be opened...the selections you order will be mailed and billed at regular Club prices, which currently are: 8-track tapes and cassettes, $6.98 or $7.98; reel tapes, $7.98; records, $5.98 or $6.98—plus shipping and handling. (Multiple unit sets and Double Selections may be somewhat higher.)

You'll be eligible for our bonus plan upon completing your enrollment agreement—a plan which enables you to continue saving money on records and tapes for as long as you remain a member. Act now!

NOTE: all applications are subject to review and Columbia House reserves the right to reject any application.

Special Start-Your-Membership-Now Offer: you may also choose your first selection right now—and we'll give it to you at 50% off regular Club prices (only $3.49 for a record; $3.99 for a tape). Enclose payment now and you'll receive it with your 10 introductory selections. This half-price purchase reduces your membership obligation immediately—you'll then be required to buy just 7 more (instead of 8) in the next three years. Keeping Up...With Youth

DEAN REED: MOSCOW FAVORITE

Dean Reed: America's Gift to the Communists

Ever hear of Dean Reed? He's the most famous U.S. pop star in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. He sings and plays the guitar, is backed by an East German band, lives in East Berlin with his second wife, is in constant demand for concerts and festivals.

His four concerts in Moscow have been complete sellouts. Ten million copies of his records have been sold in the Soviet Union, where crowds line up all night to buy tickets for his appearances.

Reed is 37, says he was born and reared in Denver, Colo., and attended the University of Colorado for two years.

He claims to have made a rock 'n' roll splash of sorts in Latin America, where the contrast between poverty and wealth turned him into a committed Marxist. From Latin America he made his way to Rome, acted in Italian Westerns, then began playing Eastern Europe, where he became an immediate hit.

Reed is the Elvis Presley of the Soviet bloc. The Young Communist League of Czechoslovakia has awarded him a medal. Hungary has given him several peace prizes. Melodiya, the Soviet recording monopoly, rates his four LP's as all-time best-selling pop albums.

Last year Reed starred in an East German film, "Blood Brothers," in which he played a pacifist cowboy. In the political society in which he lives he claims to be more musical than ideological. "I'm the kind of guy," he says, "who believes in live and let live."

Patronage Jobs

One of the most lucrative part-time jobs a young person can get these days is that of elevator operator in the U.S. Senate office buildings, the House office buildings, or the U.S. Capitol.

Currently 152 males and females hold down such jobs. They work five hours a day, six days a week, are paid $8100 a year.

Congressional elevator operators must be 18 years of age. Interested applicants should write their Senators or Congressmen for details. In years gone by these patronage jobs had gone frequently to the sons and daughters of wealthy campaign contributors or to former campaign workers attending colleges in the Washington, D.C., area.

Campus Suicide

Each year 10,000 college students in the U.S. attempt suicide. Some 1000 succeed.

According to a study by Dana L. Farnsworth, "Psychiatry, Education and the Young Adult," on a 10,000-student campus:

One thousand students will have sufficient emotional problems to seek medical help;

One hundred to 200 will be unable to continue their school work;

Fifteen to 25 will require hospitalization in a mental institution;

Five to 20 will attempt suicide and one to three will succeed.

Same the World-Over

A group of crime fighters from Eastern Europe met secretly several months ago at Varna, on Bulgaria's Black Sea. Their objective: to discuss a subject which has all Communist governments worried—juvenile delinquency.

Communists have long insisted that juvenile delinquency is a capitalist affliction from which Communist societies are exempt because of rigorous state control in bringing up children.

Not so. Juvenile delinquency is on the rise in all Communist countries, and the Reds are trying to determine why. In Bulgaria the latest available statistics reveal that at least 10% of crimes are committed by minors most of whom belong to street gangs.

In Czechoslovakia many of the growing number of crimes committed by youngsters in the 15-18 age group are committed under the influence of alcohol.

In Hungary at least 500 young people under the age of 25 commit suicide each year. They find life so bleak.

Communist governments try to blame it all on the rise of Western influences—long hair, rock 'n' roll music, blue jeans. They try to stamp out such influences. But they can't. Since the jamming of Western radio stations has ceased, kids in the Soviet Union, East Germany and Poland cut their own tapes from American, British, and West German broadcasts.

The Communist authorities in Bulgaria, for example, insist that half the songs played in bars, restaurants and discotheques must be of Bulgarian origin, another 25% of Soviet origin, and the remaining 25% can be by "famous names in the world of pop music."

In Hungary, where 30% of the high school kids drop out before graduation, pop music is more relaxed. In Budapest the newspapers list the weekly best sellers, and the discos are crowded night after night, and the musicians are difficult to control.

In Romania, possibly the strictest of the Soviet bloc satellites, the pop libraries in all the radio stations have been purged of "deleterious Western songs," and kids under 18 are barred from all Bucharest nightclubs.

Will any of these restrictions help reduce the juvenile delinquency rate? Probably not. So the Bulgarians have come up with a new gimmick. If children act illegally, Bulgarian parents will now be held responsible for having neglected their children's social and political education.

Tourist Attraction

Students at Elon College, where Britain's rich and royal families traditionally send their sons, want their school turned into a tourist attraction.

Like most preparatory schools, Elon badly needs money. To get some, the "Elon Chronicle," the school newspaper, suggests that the school try to attract some of the 3.5 million tourists who annually visit nearby Windsor Castle.

It suggests the construction on campus of a tourist shop to sell souvenirs, guidebooks, and rent out student guides,

Smoking.

What are you going to do about it?

Many people are against cigarettes. You've heard their arguments.

And even though we're in the business of selling cigarettes, we're not going to advance arguments in favor of smoking.

We simply want to discuss one irrefutable fact.

A lot of people are still smoking cigarettes. In all likelihood, they'll continue to smoke cigarettes and nothing anybody has said or is likely to say is going to change their minds.

Now, if you're one of these cigarette smokers, what are you going to do about it? You may continue to smoke your present brand. With all the enjoyment and pleasure you get from smoking it. Or, if 'tar' and nicotine has become a concern to you, you may consider changing to a cigarette like Vantage.

(Of course, there is no other cigarette quite like Vantage.)

Vantage has a unique filter that allows rich flavor to come through it and yet substantially cuts down on 'tar' and nicotine.

We want to be frank. Vantage is not the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you can buy. But it may well be the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you will enjoy smoking.

Vantage. It's the only cigarette that gives you so much taste with so little 'tar' and nicotine.

We suggest you try a pack.

Film star Doris Day, 51, and restaurateur Barry Comden, 41 (whom she may wed), at publisher's party launching her candid autobiography, which tells of three marital failures and belies her Goody Two-shoes screen image.

Doris Day

The Woman Behind the Image

by Lloyd Shearer

The late Oscar Levant, pianist, wit and raconteur, once said of film star Doris Day, "I knew her before she was a virgin."

No remark about Doris Day's movie image was ever more pithy, apt and accurate.

For 20 years, from 1948 to 1968, in some 39 films, Doris Day with few exceptions played, as she terms it, "The all-American virgin queen," the bouncy, cheerful, wholesome girl next-door, the Goody Two-shoes, the smiling, innocent small-town girl whose sweetness and light conquered male lechery and in the end won her marriage.

There is no correlation between Miss Day's off-screen life and her on-screen image.

As most reporters who covered Hollywood knew, Doris Day's personal life was frequently sexy, vapid, pathological, tragic, bedeviled and pitiful.

She confirms most of this in Doris Day—Her Own Story, a recent autobiography in which she tells nearly all to her collaborator, A. E. Hotchner, best known for his book, Papa Hem- ingway.

The truth about Doris Day—she dislikes that name and much prefers Clara Bixby, a name whimsically given her by some friends and which many of us call her—is that she is a courageous woman of 51 who, on the basis of her record, is one of the world's worst selectors of husbands.

Born and reared in Cincinnati, child of a broken home, she witnessed—as a child of 10 her father's affair with the mother of her best friend.

At 13 she was riding in a car hit by a train, an accident which ended her promising career as a dancer.

At 16 she left high school to earn her living on the road, singing nightly with the big bands—Barney Rapp, Bob Crosby, Les Brown.

Thrown together with musicians, some talented, others wayward, she chose at 17 to marry Al Jorden, a psychopathic trumpeter who played in the Gene Krupa and Jimmy Dorsey bands. He beat her mercilessly even when she was pregnant; undoubtedly trying to provoke a miscarriage. He was violently opposed to her giving birth. But Doris did—to a boy, Terry, who many years later was marked for murder in Hollywood by the notorious Charles Manson gang. Instead of murdering Terry, who had befriended Manson, the gang brutally killed actress Sharon Tate and some of her friends who were occupying a house Terry had once lived in.

After escaping from and divorcing Jorden, who eventually killed himself, Doris promptly married another musician, a Stan Kenton saxophonist, George Weidler, brother of screen actress Virginia Weidler.

Subsequently Weidler left her, because he didn't want to become "Mr. Doris Day." From him, however, she acquired a lasting interest in Christian Science.

Quick movie stardom

Although she had no acting experience, Doris Kappelhoff—her real name—became a film star as a result of her first movie, Romance on the High Seas, in 1940.

For a while there were affairs with actor Jack Carson, her ex-husbands, dates with Ronald Reagan—"How Ron loved to talk and dance," she recalls—and others.

"But apparently I didn't know when I was well off," she admits. "Even though I was a two-times loser at marriage, all I ever really wanted to be was a housewife, a housewife who would rather clean, scrub, wax and polish than have a big career."

Thus on April 3, 1951, her 27th birthday, Doris Day married her agent Marty Melcher. He had previously been married to another singer, Patty Andrews of the Andrews Sisters. He was a shallow, conniving, transparently deceitful man of no apparent skill.

Melcher's 'legacy'

What Marty Melcher did to Doris Day is now part of filmland's lore. He never beat her. He simply used her. He managed her career and her money, and together with a lawyer, Jerome Rosenthal, so mismanaged her investments, "putting me in oil and hotels," that when Melcher died in 1968, Doris after 17 years of marriage to him found herself $500,000 in debt.

In 1974, following five years of investigation and preparation, Doris Day brought attorney Jerome Rosenthal to trial in the California Superior Court, attempting to recover some of her money. The trial lasted 100 days. At the end Judge Lester Olson awarded her total damages of $22,835,646, the largest amount ever awarded in a civil suit in California.

The above is just a skeleton of Doris Day's life. Her autobiography fleshes it out in candor and detail. It is not a prettystory. It reveals in the truest sense of that word her naiveté, her jarring lack of judgment, especially where men are concerned.

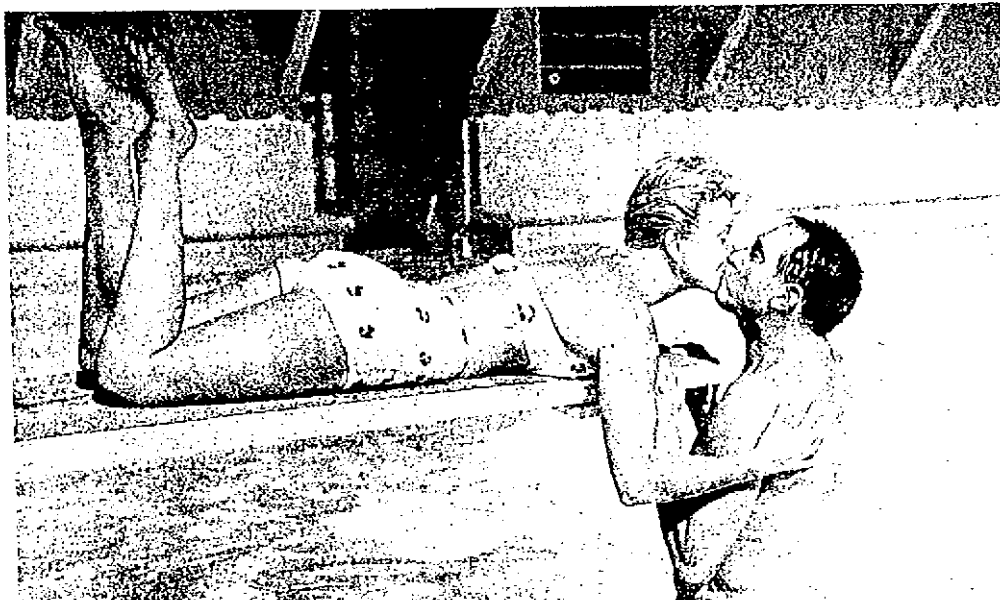

Despite her three marital failures, however, she considers herself "blessed, happy, and grateful," an indication of her limitless optimism in the face of adversity.

A few weeks ago when we discussed her past, she agreed that she had paid a high tuition in the school of experience. "But I have no regrets, she explained. "That's the way I've grown and learned. The first man I married, Al Jorden—I was only 17—he was a Dr. Jekyll-Mr. Hyde personality. We carried on most of our courtship by mail. Who argues by mail? I was too young to listen to advice, to men like Barney Rapp and Les Brown who knew Al and warned me against him.

8-month marriage

"The second one I married, I really didn't want to get married. It only lasted about eight months. He was traveling, and I was singing at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York with Les Brown's band. George came to New York. He said he couldn't stand it without me. He started talking about marriage. I'm a very old-fashioned lady. My desire as a girl was to get married and live happily ever after, have children, take care of my husband, cook and do all those things. I've never been ambitious. I have no drive in me. I turn down one thing after another. I'm not bragging, but I'm really not happy accepting show business offers.

"George Weidler had a gentleness about him. There was a strong physical

Springboard to trouble: Doris Day with Marty Melcher, her third husband, who, along with a lawyer, managed her money. Marty died in '68, leaving her $500,000 in debt. She later sued the lawyer, won $22 million award.

attraction between us. We'd slept together many times. Many times. But more than sex is necessary for a good marriage. I know that now but I didn't know it then.

"We drove to Mount Vernon, N.Y., and a funny thing: We were married by a justice of the peace, but I can't remember the ceremony or who our witnesses were or what George and I did afterward. I do recall, however, that on the way to Mount Vernon, I looked out the car window and said to myself, 'Why are you getting married? It's another mistake, so why are you doing this?' But I did. I did."

Doris also says in retrospect that she felt some doubt about marrying Marty Melcher, her third husband. "I wasn't too sure about being in love with him. I think that maybe I loved him. But more likely he was a father-substitute. He took over completely. He turned me into a dependent child. He really seemed like my good friend. To me that was another attraction.

"Marty was very loving with my son and really good with my mother. I suddenly felt for the first time that maybe he was the one for me. I didn't know about the other side of him, his obsession with money, his deceit, his dealings. He took over so completely, he got us financially so involved that it was impossible for us to get a divorce when I wanted one. I guess I was looking for that sort of protective cover at the time. I'm not looking for that now.

"I'm very self-sufficient. After Marty died, I made all the decisions, and I really was on my own. I loved it. At first I felt like I was 12, that I was a child, lonely and unprotected, and it was really incredible for me to overcome, but I did it within that first year after he died. And I became my old self again, optimistic and self-reliant, like when I was very young.

"Marty had two sides, one side with me and another side with all of his business associates and his friends. He kept people away from me, people who might tell me the truth about him, and everyone thought that it was my doing. I didn't know what was going on. I'm really a very outgoing girl.

'Trust me, darling'

"When I finally found out about him and Jerry Rosenthal investing our money in the Palo Alto Cabana Hotel—it was really my money because Marty had no money of his own—it was then too late. Marty would say to me all the time, 'Do you trust me, darling, or don't you?' That was his theme song.

"What I really wanted to do with my money was to buy paintings and antiques and some land in the San Fernando Valley, but Marty wouldn't permit me to spend anything without an OK from Rosenthal.

"But all of that is in the past, and maybe it sounds strange, but I've learned that those sharp experiences are really beautiful. We need them to shape us up. Without them we wouldn't have the strength to handle what is coming. With each experience I gained some strength.

"I told my son Terry, after his father died, that I was going to be like those little clown dolls that are round on the bottom, because with a round bottom you can't get knocked down. Today I've got a round, round bottom. I just know that whatever is happening is going to be good."

A new love

At the moment love and the possibility of a fourth marriage loom for Doris Day, although as she insists, "I would never again marry a man without first having lived with him."

The man in question is Barry Comden, 41, a restaurant manager 10 years her junior, a tall, pleasant, handsome, prematurely gray-haired gentleman who supervises the Old World Eatery in Beverly Hills and three others in Los Angeles and Palm Springs.

The restaurants are owned by Dr. Robert Franks, who's been Doris' dentist for 20 years.

"That's how Barry and I met," Doris explains, "through Dr. Franks. I guess it was last May. My mother was in the hospital. My secretary and I would visit her, and instead of cooking at home, we'd eat in the Old World.

"One day I'd been in to see Bob Franks to have X rays taken of my teeth, which I do periodically, and he said, 'Why don't you go to my restaurant?'

Observations

"The true potential of solar power all but boggles the mind."

Jim Wright, Member, U.S. House of Representatives

So who's arguing? Congressman Wright is right. Absolutely. Enough sunlight hits the United States every day to satisfy the nation's total energy requirements for a year and a half. Nor are we about to run out. Sunshine will last several billion more years, give or take an aeon. And it's free—with no Organization of Sunbeam Exporting Countries to jack up the price.

What's the problem? Like sex appeal, if we could bottle it, we'd have it made. Although a number of solar-heated homes have been built, and solar-heat collectors are available commercially, it will take time before more than a small percentage of our total heating requirements will be met by solar energy. In fact, it will probably take until the next decade. We need better ways to convert, collect, and store solar heat at down-to-earth prices.

The large-scale conversion of sunlight to electricity is even further in the future.

Sure, progress has been made. Photovoltaic cells that convert the sun's rays into electricity have worked on more than 600 manned and unmanned space flights. Solar cells can serve down-to-earth uses, too, once man finds a way to mass-produce them and to store up electricity for nights and dark days, at a reasonable cost. About 5,000 square miles of solar cells—an area 50 by 100 miles—could equal today's total U.S. electricity production.

"SOLAR ENERGY? WHAT IN HELL IS SOLAR ENERGY?"

We're betting on it. Over the next few years, Mobil will be investing up to $30 million in Mobil Tyco Solar Energy Corporation for developing an economic method to convert sunlight directly into electricity. Mobil Tyco is now perfecting a process for "growing" single-crystal silicon ribbons for making solar cells. Its scientists can already grow ribbons as long as 80 feet, and as fast as two inches a minute. Even so, at today's level of technology, the gear to supply electricity for one home would cost more than $50,000.

But it will take time. As one expert put it: "You can't make a baby in a month by making nine women pregnant." Thus, even though there's a lot of research activity, chances are the sun won't have a sizable impact on the nation's energy supply before 1990. By then, however, the sun could be producing as much as 2% to 3% of the country's energy needs.

Says prominent science writer Isaac Asimov: "Given time, scientists can overcome the practical problems. We'll need politicians to back them and people who can understand the potential of this energy source and are willing to see their tax money spent on its development. . . . We need vision, we need courage—and we need some luck, too."

He said he owned three and he was just thrilled with the way things were going.

"He told me that he was ordering some pure, homemade ice cream for me. 'I want you to go over and pick it up as a present from me. You go there right from this office.' I don't know if I met Barry Comden that day or what, but it was right after I did that I said to my secretary, 'From now on we'll have dinner there every time we leave the hospital.'"

"Since then Barry and I have been seeing lots of each other. He's gotten to know my son very well, and they really like each other. You see, Barry was not on trial with Terry [who's 34 today] and Terry was not on trial with him. They just really like each other."

Does Doris Day plan to marry Barry? "It's possible," she concedes. "Anything is possible. I don't know, nobody knows. I just think he's a beautiful person, and we have a marvelous relationship, really better than any relationship that I've ever had before."

"Oh, Clara!" I interrupted. "You say that every, every time."

As to why she agreed to write her autobiography, Doris Day says it was inspired by her friend, the late novelist Jacqueline Susann. "Every time we'd talk on the phone, Jackie would say to me, 'You've simply got to do a book.' Finally when Morrow, the publishing house, came up with Hotch [A.E. Hotchner] as my collaborator, I agreed—not because I needed the money but because I felt I had a story to tell that might provide readers with the courage and strength to face up to life."

"I worked on the book for about a year. I would talk into a tape recorder, and Hotch would take it from there. After we got tired of working we'd ride our bikes around Beverly Hills. Doing the book was a lovely experience, and I'm glad I did it."

Ronald Reagan is shown here supporting Doris Day in their film, "The Winning Team." For a while they dated, and "How Ron loved to talk and dance," Doris remembers.

Crime and Punishment, 1976

by Judge Douglass B. Wright

Judge Douglass B. Wright on the bench in his Superior Court in Connecticut.

It has become popular to claim that the rise in crime has been due, in large measure, to "lenient judges" who mete out sentences of insufficient severity. Before one subscribes to this theory, it is suggested that the history of the last 15 years be reviewed.

This history exemplifies one of the first maxims a student learns in law school: "Meritorious cases make bad law."

Out of the many injustices and abuses involving minority groups there came from the United States Supreme Court certain rulings during the '60s that were desperately needed. However, out of these rulings came another problem: the criminal elements of this country were prompt to seize upon these new doctrines to subvert the law.

For instance, the landmark Miranda case set forth five limitations upon interrogation by police. Before any questioning begins, the subject must be told:

- "1. You are warned that anything you say may be used in a court of law against you;
2. You have an absolute right to remain silent;
3. You have the right to the advice of a lawyer before the questioning, and the presence of a lawyer here with you during the questioning;
4. If you cannot afford a lawyer, a lawyer will be appointed for you at the state's expense, if you so desire;
5. At any time during the course of the questioning you may refuse to continue with the questioning."

Until 1961 the state courts made their own rules on the admissibility of evidence, but in that year the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Mapp v. Ohio initiated certain Exclusionary Rules which keep from the trial jury items of evidence which were formerly admissible in state tribunals. This decision was followed by the Wade, Gilbert, Stovall, and Simmons decisions, imposing limitations upon identification of an accused party and requiring the presence of an attorney under certain situations, such as lineups.

The pre-trial hearings

Prior to trial, hearings are held to obtain "exculpatory information" which prosecutors may have in their files. Decisions on the Fourth Amendment regarding searches and seizures have led to preliminary hearings on the validity of search warrants, as well as preliminary hearings on arrest warrants. The courts are frequently faced with preliminary challenges to the "array" of jurors, resulting from decisions (which were necessary decisions) arising out of the systematic exclusion of racial groups from inclusion on jury lists in certain sections of the country.

In addition, prosecutors complain that there is no end to a criminal case, as habeas corpus petitions in the federal courts follow "final" decisions by the state courts. The effect of these rulings has been to greatly increase the time and expense of criminal litigation, both before and after the trial itself.

As a result of these sanctions and rulings during the years of the Warren court, it has become increasingly difficult, often impossible, for prosecutors to obtain convictions. At the Connecticut Bar Association's annual convention in New Haven in the late Sixties, a well-known defense lawyer from New York boasted to the assembled lawyers: "Because of the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, in every criminal case that I defend, I file 30 or 40 motions prior to trial, with the result that the prosecutor and court become so exhausted that I can get any deal I want!"

On the one hand crime has increased markedly during the recent years, while on the other hand it has become extremely difficult under the new rulings for the police and prosecution authorities to bring criminal offenders to the bar of justice. In order to clear the crowded dockets and in order to obtain some degree of retribution from the criminal offender, it has become more and more necessary to engage in plea bargaining.

Other forces and pressures have been felt during these same years. Penologists have been increasingly stressing the desirability of probation, as opposed to the historical approach of incarceration. Rehabilitation of the individual offender is certainly a laudable goal. In addition, the strain upon the taxpayer's pocketbook, arising out of estimates of approximately $8000 a year per prisoner in the correctional institutions, has been compared to the much smaller cost of placing the offender on probation.

Things to consider

When a trial judge comes to the day of sentencing, he tries to balance the following needs:

1. Rehabilitation of the offender.
2. Protection of society.
3. Detering others from the same misconduct.

Some penologists claim that the old concept of punishment should be discarded. The United States Constitution rightfully prohibits "cruel and unusual" punishments—and we all can agree that the "eye for an eye" type of retribution is now outmoded. However, should we abandon the idea of punishment altogether?

At a criminal law symposium in Connecticut during the year 1972, Dr. Robert B. Miller, superintendent of a state mental hospital, advocated that the courts should be stern with first offenders, rather than lenient. He cited the analogy that if a person wins in his first day of gambling at a racetrack, he becomes hooked on gambling. Dr. Miller stressed that discipline and punishment are still important, as human beings are not born with a conscience.

An official view

As early as 1969 the American Bar Association issued the following statement, in the face of the violence and unrest of that year:

"The American Bar Association views with profound disquiet the current tendency among groups of our citizens, and especially among many young people, to disregard the rule of law upon which a democratic society must depend for its viability and progress.

"Those who elect to defy a law because of some dictate of conscience or the intensity of their cause must be prepared to accept the normal penalties of non-compliance, subject of course to the requirements of due process."

Many lawyers, jurists, and outraged citizens have come to the conclusion that the pendulum has swung too far in the effort to protect persons charged with crime.

Chief Justice Walter H. McLoughlin of the Massachusetts Superior Court recently made the following observations in a Law Day address:

"I would never suggest to the courts of our land, no matter how dark the hovering clouds of crime, that there ever be the slightest deviation from the constitutional rights and guarantee long afforded to the accused, but I do suggest that our courts give him that and no more.

"I would suggest that we start trying the defendant on his guilt and innocence and stop trying the police on how they got the evidence."

Of course there can be no single solution to the problem of containing crime, as so many factors must be resolved, such as poverty, city slums, increasing population and difficult economic conditions.

For the future

However, a major step can be taken if the courts can find a way to dispose of their crowded criminal dockets and if proper penalties can be imposed for the serious crimes that are currently so rampant. The trial courts, meeting these problems on the firing line, are bound by the pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court. It is submitted that the Supreme Court should take a second look at its decisions of the Sixties. Before the trial courts can effectively dispose of the tremendous backlog and can obtain the convictions which will justify a meaningful penalty, the law of the land must swing around to giving more consideration to the plight of innocent victims of crime, as opposed to the present emphasis on the rights of offenders.

Recent medical discoveries link low levels of zinc, a metal present in the body in only tiny amounts, to 1) stunted growth, 2) highly distorted senses of taste and smell, 3) telltale white spots on fingernails, 4) the retardation of the sexual development of men, and 5) some prostate disorders. Zinc also may aid healing of wounds.

ZINC

Its Importance to Your Health

by Lawrence Galton

They were patients who for years had been considered neurotic. Some couldn't taste or smell; others had grossly distorted taste and smell sensations. Yet nothing physically wrong could be found.

Today they are free of their problems as the result of simple treatment with a metal, zinc.

And that same metal treatment lately has been making other medical news—as a help for some children with poor appetites and growth rates, for babies with a life-threatening illness, for some men with prostate disorders, and for more.

Zinc is one of a class of substances present in the body in only the tiniest amounts and as little understood today as were vitamins 75 years ago. Iodine is one of these trace elements; copper, another; chromium, still another; and there are more.

Helps Shrink Swelling Of Hemorrhoidal Tissues Due To Inflammation. Relieves Pain & Itch...

Gives prompt temporary relief in many cases from hemorrhoidal pain and burning itch in such tissues.

There's an exclusive formulation which actually helps shrink the painful swelling of hemorrhoidal tissues caused by infection. In many cases the first applications give prompt, temporary relief from itching and pain in hemorrhoidal tissues.

The sufferer first notices relief from such painful discomfort. Then this medication helps to gently reduce swelling of hemorrhoidal tissues. Tests conducted by doctors on hundreds of patients in New York City, Washington, D.C., and at a Midwest Medical Center showed this to be true in many cases.

The medication used by doctors in these tests was Preparation H® —the same exclusive formula you can buy at any drug counter without a prescription. Preparation H also lubricates the affected area to protect the inflamed, irritated surface and so helps make regularity more comfortable.

There is no other formula like Preparation H. In ointment or suppository form.

The effects of zinc deficiency are still only partially known

Their total weight in the body is only an ounce or less. But they are essential. Without iodine, for example, the thyroid gland couldn't produce thyroid hormones and we would become cretins—mentally retarded, physically underdeveloped. Yet the human body contains only about 30 milligrams of iodine—and a milligram is just one thousandth of a gram and a gram is about one thirtieth of an ounce.

Only recently has it become apparent that zinc is vital, that a lack of it can produce many health problems and that zinc deficiency is not uncommon.

Speeds wound-healing

Much of the first U. S. research on zinc centered on its role in wound-healing. Only about a dozen years ago, Dr. Walter J. Pories, then of the Air Force and now at the University of Rochester, made a key observation while studying wound-healing in laboratory animals and how it might be influenced by adding various compounds to their diets. One compound accelerated healing, and the effect was traced to its zinc content. Zinc definitely sped healing.

Dr. Pories and his co-workers then studied otherwise-healthy young airmen recovering from surgery. All received the same treatment, but half also received zinc in the form of zinc sulfate. In the zinc-treated, healing time was cut almost in half.

Another striking development came several years later with the discovery of zinc's value in taste and smell disorders. At the government's National Institutes of Health (NIH) in Bethesda, Md., Dr. R. I. Henkin and other investigators worked with 3000 patients before reporting their findings.

They named the disorders idiopathic hypogeusia with dysgeusia, hyposmia and dysosmia. Translated, that means the cause is unknown (idiopathic), taste acuity is diminished (hypogeusia), tastes are distorted and even revolting (dysgeusia), smell acuity is diminished (hyposmia), and odors are obnoxious (dysosmia).

In some patients, one or another problem began during or soon after an acute respiratory illness; in others, after some other illness or surgery; in still others, there was no preceding illness or unusual event.

Loses weight and his job

There could be serious repercussions. One patient, a 53-year-old pizza maker, lost ability to taste and smell after a respiratory infection and, on returning to work, the NIH doctors reported, "noted profound, almost overpoweringly obnoxious odors associated with various foods and vapors." When he tried to eat, he found that most foods "smelled and tasted like manure or decayed garbage." He could eat only lettuce, rice, a few bland cheeses, and fresh apples, was forced to quit his job, lost 15 pounds. Another patient was so revolted by food that he lost 50 pounds.

The NIH physicians found that patients often had had trouble convincing their doctors that they actually experienced such symptoms—many were sent to psychiatrists. The symptoms and loss of appetite and weight frequently caused anxiety and in some cases "severe depression with thoughts of self-destruction."

Yet it turned out that the patients had one thing in common: low blood levels of zinc. And they responded to treatment with zinc sulfate.

Meanwhile, evidence was accumulating that zinc deficiency could cause retarded growth. First, in the Middle East where many people exist on zinc-deficient diets, researchers found that many dwarflike young boys grew once they were put on a high zinc diet.

Study from Iran

At an American medical meeting, Dr. H. A. Ronagy of Pahlavi University School of Medicine, Shiraz, Iran, reported a study of 187 dwarfs among 20-year-old men eligible for conscription into the Iranian army. All had low zinc concentration in blood and hair. Given zinc, they not only grew in height but also developed sexually.

Almost at the same time, Dr. Harold H. Sandstead of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Human Nutrition Laboratory in Grand Forks, N. Dak., was treating a 20-year-old man with an intestinal disorder that interfered with zinc absorption from food. When the man received extra zinc, he quickly grew three inches taller and developed sexually.

Taste acuity returns

More recently, at the University of Colorado Medical Center in Denver, Dr. Michael Hambidge found that many children suffering from retarded growth had low levels of zinc in their hair. They also had poor appetites and, in many cases, impaired taste sensations. When they were fed small amounts of zinc, hair levels increased, normal taste acuity returned, appetites improved and, in some, significant increases in growth occurred.

Still more recently, in 1974, has come another finding in England that could save the lives of many babies. Diaper rash is usually a passing irritation. But in some infants it thickens, spreads from buttocks to legs, face, and elsewhere. Diarrhea also develops along with weight and hair loss. Such infants have a metabolic disorder known as acrodermatitis enteropathica that usually manifests itself at weaning and can be life-threatening.

Babies get well

In such babies, Dr. Edmund J. Mynahan of Guy's Hospital, London, discovered gross zinc deficiency, and he has put a group of them on zinc sulfate. "All," he reports, "are now completely symptom-free and are thriving on the zinc supplement alone."

Recently, too, American physicians have reported other findings. At the Brain Bio Center, Princeton, N. J., Dr. Carl C. Pfeiffer has noted that many children and teen-agers and some adults have white spots in the fingernails (and in some cases, in the toenails as well), apparently primarily a result of zinc deficiency. The spots could be looked upon as one possible warning sign. Treatment with zinc along with vitamin B6, Dr. Pfeiffer reports, clears smaller white spots and prevents further spot formation; large spots grow out with the nails, a process requiring five to six months.

At Cook County Hospital, Chicago, Dr. Irving M. Bush has related zinc deficiency to some prostate gland disorders in men.

Actually, while zinc is present in all body tissues, the prostate gland apparently has particular need for relatively large amounts and normally has one of the highest concentrations. Could low concentrations cause trouble?

Dr. Bush has reported using zinc sulfate in doses of 50 to 150 milligrams a day for up to 16 weeks, relieving urinary frequency, irritation and other symptoms of chronic abacterial prostatitis (nonbacterial inflammation of the gland) in 70 percent of more than 200 patients. And when he tried the same treatment in a group of men with benign prostatic hypertrophy, a common overgrowth of the gland which interferes with normal urinary function, almost three of every four responded with reduction in prostate size.

May find new uses

This may not include all conditions in which zinc could be important.

As of now, some 20 essential zinc-containing body enzymes have been identified. Zinc is known to be required for building body proteins, generating body energy, growth, sexual development, taste and smell. And the effects of zinc deficiency are still only partially known.

Zinc is present in most protein foods—meat, milk, fish and eggs. Whole grains also contain zinc. Although only 20 to 30 percent of total zinc in food is available for absorption and use by the body, still, a good common U. S. diet provides 10 to 15 milligrams of zinc daily, which should allow absorption of 1 to 2 milligrams, an adequate amount.

But some experts believe that zinc deficiency is far from rare in this country. Dr. Richard W. Luecke, a Michigan State University biochemist, has noted that "there is ample reason to suspect that zinc intakes of a number of individuals in this country may be marginal. Zinc shortages can be found in all people, rich or poor. Perhaps some people might benefit by taking a 'zinc pill' to supplement their diet."

Additives for bread

For years, foodstuffs such as flour and bread and cereals have been fortified with iron and several vitamins. In 1974, the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council reported a need for much broader fortification that would include more vitamins, other minerals and zinc, because evidence indicates deficiencies in many diets. For such a program, the board noted, technical studies would be needed to determine how the nutrients could be added so they are dispersed uniformly, don't separate during commercial handling, and don't adversely affect color, flavor and odor of foodstuffs.

Meanwhile, the growing number of reports about the usefulness of zinc sulfate prescribed by physicians for some very specific problems could benefit thousands.

THE RICE DIET

IT'S A HEALING DIET AS WELL AS A REDUCING DIET

The famous Rice Diet wasn't even designed for taking off fat. It was created as a healing diet. And heal it does. IT CONTAINS NO CHOLESTEROL

Medical Research has acclaimed a no-fat diet as being of paramount aid in the treatment of certain heart and kidney conditions. Scientists also advocate this program as the basis of a general reducing diet.

The health value of this diet is founded upon the fact that it contains no cholesterol — which many doctors believe dangerous to the heart, kidneys, and blood circulation.

THE DIET REVERSES MUCH DAMAGE DONE BY HEART DISORDERS

Twenty-five years ago our medical establishment was extremely skeptical of the startling discovery that the Rice Diet reverses much of the damage done by blood vessel, eye, heart, and kidney disorders. Without any medication other than a prolonged diet largely composed of unsalted rice, some enlarged hearts grew smaller, blood pressures and blood sugar dropped.

CLAIMS FOR THE RICE DIET VERIFIED BY TEAMS OF DOCTORS

Teams of doctors from leading institutions around the world investigated the diet. They thought that they would scoff at the claims, but they applauded instead. "The question now," concluded a report in one eminent medical journal, "is not 'Does the diet work?' The question is 'How does it work?'"

FAMOUS PEOPLE HAVE ENDORSED THE RESULTS OF RICE DIETING

"I truly would have died if I hadn't gone" on a program of rice dieting, says the wife of a former state governor. "I was seriously ill and weighed 230 pounds." She dropped 80 pounds in 19 weeks, and her blood sugar plummeted as well. (Since the diet is largely carbohydrate, this is one of the mysteries of it.)

A famous singer and movie actor, on the other hand, got hooked on the taste of the diet and lost 80 pounds, too. He still follows the diet every day. Before the Rice Diet, he had been on a high-protein diet for ten years or so: "I used to have to put down a pound of steak before a recording," he says. "Now, I can eat a little rice and sing like a bird."

Tens of thousands of people have benefited from "The Rice Diet," and less than one in 200 have asked for a refund. If you have any questions about it, we invite you to show it to your doctor for his o.k. Order Now!

PARADE OF PROGRESS

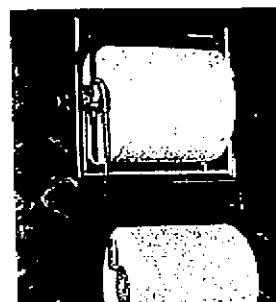

TAKE A LOOK AT THESE NEW IDEAS FOR YOUR HOME AND FAMILY ■ BY PETER DRYDEN

LADDER LEVELERS: With new accessory legs, you can modify any wood or metal ladder—step, straight, or extension type—for safe use on stairs, slopes, or ground of varying elevation. Installed quickly with simple hand tools, the legs accommodate as much as an 11-inch difference in elevation, have spring-loaded locking devices and ball socket swivel feet with rubber pads for a firm grip on sloped surfaces. Two leg assemblies, complete with all necessary hardware: $23.95 ppd. Utility Products, Dept. PP, 1212 Powell St., Oakland, Cal. 94608. (above left)

DESIGNER HANDBAG KIT: If you'd like to make for yourself or as a gift this handbag with wood frame and a delicate look of filigree, a new kit contains everything you need. It includes crewel fabric, yarn, needle, frame, handle, lining and other incidental hardware, along with fully illustrated, step-by-step instructions. Bag dimensions: 11" x 9". $7.59 ppd. LeeWards, Dept. PP, Box 903, Elgin, Ill. 60120. (above right)

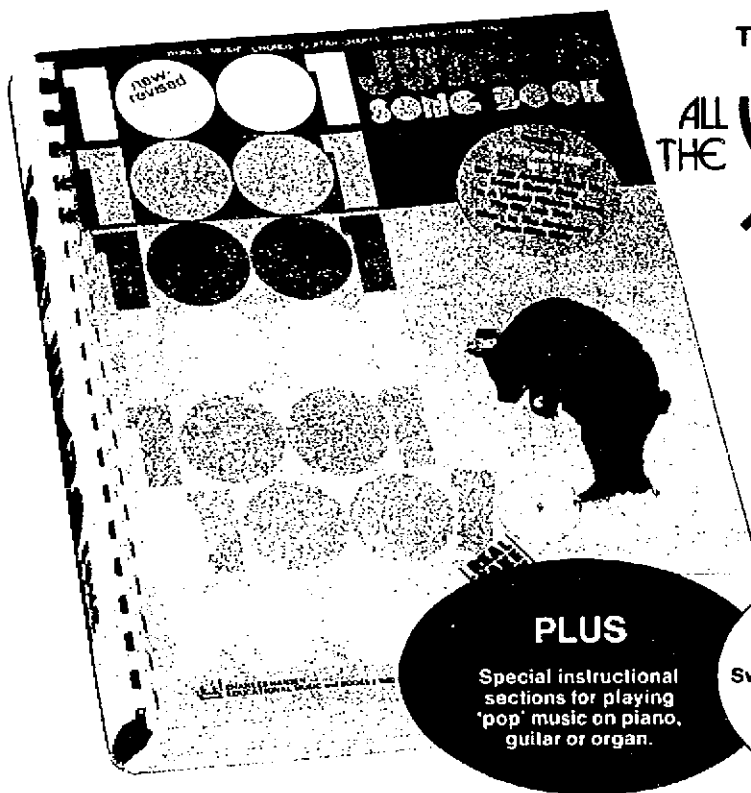

CAR BATTERY HEATER: At zero degrees F., a car battery delivers about 60% less than normal power. A new electric, wraparound heater is designed to keep your battery warm and therefore more powerful, helping to assure fast starts in cold weather. It remains unharmed by oils, acids or alkalis, claims the maker, and comes with power cord for plug-in to standard household current and clips for attachment. Suggested retail price: $4.95. Smith-Gates Corp., Dept. PP, Farmington, Conn. 06032.

ADD A ROLL: Slipped over an existing toilet tissue holder, this chrome-plated unit accommodates an extra roll of paper, ready for use. You can also use it to hold washcloth, hand towel, or other items. It measures 7 1/4" x 5 1/4". Suggested retail price: $1.19. Grayline Housewares, Dept. PP, 1616 Berkley St., Elgin, Ill. 60120. (above left)

HUNTER'S BUCKET/SEAT: Handy for hunters, this bucket and seat combination stands 19 1/2" high, the right seat height, weighs about 8 pounds empty, is easy to carry either by its two handles or adjustable web shoulder strap, and comes equipped with a matching cartridge belt that holds up to 25 shotgun shells. Inside, the insulated bucket has 5-gallon capacity for food, beverages, or additional equipment and clothes. After the hunt, it can store small, field-dressed game with ice, minimizing spoilage. It has a leak-proof, push-button spigot and is also useful after the hunting season as a beverage cooler for parties and picnics. Suggested list price: $30.75. Covey Corp., Dept. PP, Box 1317, Houston, Tex. 77001. (above right)

AND THAT'S JUST THE BEGINNING THERE ARE 951 MORE!!!

Have you ever wondered how professional musicians learn all the songs they are requested to play? How can they ever afford to buy all that sheet music? Well, most of them don't. Up until a few years ago they could buy a "fake" book of 500 songs or more. (It was illegal in those days.) Such a great book would cost them only $75 or so. A fantastic savings for $500 to $1,000's worth of music! But now, thanks to Hansen Publishing, the greatest "fake" book of all time is available (and legally too) to professionals and amateurs alike... and for only $14.95. (Your mail order price is only $12.95!) That's just over a penny per song... songs which usually sell for $1.00 or more each.

This great collection is guaranteed to thrill and delight every member of your family. Music for all ages... songs for every musical taste. From Country to Rock, Pop & Jazz... and, of course, the great standard love songs of all time. Try it at your next party... and see who can stump the piano player. With this book it is almost impossible!

LEARN TO PLAY BY CHORDS

In addition to the 1001 songs, this fantastic songbook also contains sections of Instrumental Instruction: How To Play Chords (for the beginning guitarist)... How To Learn-and-Play By Chords (for all keyboard instruments)... PLUS... a complete guide to all organ registrations.

The book is plastic-spiral bound... so it lies perfectly flat on your music stand. All songs are in alphabetical order so you can find them quickly, just like the 'pros' do.

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Here's a book we'll allow you to return for up to 30 days... because it will take at least a month for you to get through it. If after one full month you don't agree that this is the most complete, most entertaining music book you could ever own, just return it for a complete refund. No questions asked.

So why not order yours today. You've absolutely nothing to lose... and endless years of musical enjoyment to gain.

LEADERSHIP LOST

On a per capita basis the United States is no longer the world's richest industrialized nation.

The World Bank disclosed a few weeks ago that Sweden and Switzerland overtook us in 1974. The per capita income in Sweden was $6720 for the year and in Switzerland it was $6640. In the United States for every man, woman, and child income averaged out to $6200.

Kuwait and several of the United Arab Emirates boast higher per capita incomes than Sweden, Switzerland, and the U.S.A., but that's because they contain large amounts of oil and fewer people.

What's happened to the Republican party? Has it lost its last vestige of liberalism? The Gallup Poll recently presented a balanced list of 10 Republican Presidential candidates, potential and actual.

The list consisted of five conservatives: Ford, Reagan, Baker, Goldwater and Buckley--and five centrists or middle-of-the-roads: Rockefeller, Richardson, Hatfield, Percy and Connally.

Of the two groups, the second or progressive wing was almost completely wiped out. It received 14 percent of the total vote. The conservative wing received 85 percent, and 1 percent gave no choice.

Apparently the Republican party moves ever more to the right.

The last time Elizabeth visited Northern Ireland, in July, 1966, a young Irishman hurled a piece of concrete at the royal car, an offense which cost him four years in jail.

BIBLE BACK TO NO. 1

The Bible has recovered its position as the world's most translated work. Several years ago it lost out to the works of Marx, Engels, and Lenin.

According to a spokesman from UNESCO, "The latest figures we have are from 1972, and they show the Bible in the lead."

The most widely translated living writer in 1972 was Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the exiled Soviet author, whose works have appeared in 35 languages, the same number which honors William Shakespeare.

By 1972 there were 109 new translations of the Bible, 62 of Karl Marx, 59 of Friedrich Engels, and 57 of Vladimir Lenin. Soviet literature dominates the translation hits largely because the Soviet Union provides them at relatively little cost.

CASHING FEE

As most tourists know, Belgium is a bad country in which to cash travelers checks. Belgian banks charge a minimum fee of about $2.25 each time a traveler seeks to convert a check. That's a hefty commission to pay on a $10 travelers check. Better cash large checks in Belgium. You have to pay the minimum fee no matter what amount you convert.

IMELDA AND FERDINAND MARCOS

MARCOS AUTHORIZES GAMBLING

Ferdinand Marcos, dictator of the Philippines, has authorized the operation of a floating casino as a first step toward the legalization of gambling in his country.

Blackjack, roulette and other games of chance are now allowed aboard the Philippine Tourist, a vessel purchased in Europe and formerly known as the S.S. Breimer.

Marcos and his wife Imelda, leader of the international jet set, reportedly had Italian film star Gina Lollobrigida aboard the vessel as one of its first celebrity guests.

CORAL GABLES RISING

Coral Gables, Fla. (pop. 47,000), a suburb of Miami, is gradually transforming itself into the business center for Latin America.

American corporations, once based in Venezuela, Mexico, Brazil, and Central American countries, are transferring their Latin-American headquarters to Coral Gables.

The reason: to avoid red tape, quixotic regulations, terrorist activities and bribery.

American companies that have established offices in Coral Gables include Texaco, Exxon, Gulf Oil, Dow Chemical, Pfizer, Goodyear and about 50 others.

Coral Gables is close to Miami International Airport, the hub for planes to and from Latin America; and Miami, of course, with its thousands of Cuban emigrés is a rich supply center for bilingual employees.

CANADA'S FIRST LADY MARGARET TRUDEAU AND SHIP OWNER YUE KONG PAO. HER HATCHET CUTS A ROPE TO SMASH A CHAMPAGNE BOTTLE AT A SHIP CHRISTENING IN JAPAN.

THE LEADER

The world has long heard of such shipping magnates as Onassis, Niarcho, and Livanos of Greece, Ludwig of the U.S., Reksten of Norway, and Tikkoo of India. But who has ever heard of Yue Kong Pao?

This 58-year-old Chinese living in Hong Kong has gradually become the single largest independent ship owner in the world.

Son of a wealthy paper manufacturer in Shanghai, Pao was one of those lucky Chinese who fled before the Communists took over his city.

He journeyed to Hong Kong, obtained British citizenship, started in as a real estate agent, gradually worked his way up to merchant banker.

"Houses just stand around," he points out, "sort of boringly. That's why I decided to invest my money in movable possessions." In 1950, although he didn't know the difference between port and starboard, Pao took his savings and, with a substantial amount of credit provided by the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, bought an old 8000-ton freighter for a flat $1 million.

Today he owns 190 tankers of tremendous tonnage. He still insists, however, upon leading a spartan life. He swims for 20 minutes every day from 6 a.m. to 6:20 regardless of the weather. He puts in a 12-hour workday six days a week, is fond of quoting such ancient Chinese proverbs as: "He who gives no cause for envy lives a satisfied life without danger."

He believes publicity causes envy and is therefore chary about granting interviews or elaborating on his wealth.

DOG NEUTRALIZER

There's a new item available on the British market which causes vicious dogs to flee so that the mailman can deliver the mail and the meter-reader can read the gas and electric meters.

It's about as large as a cassette tape recorder and it emits supersonic waves which cause such pain in a dog's ears that the animal retreats immediately.

The trouble with the weapon, which sells for around $42 in London, is that it can be used by thieves to neutralize watchdogs. The gadget, in contrast to chemical sprays, does no permanent harm to a dog.

AMERICA'S FUTURE

"Some people plan, others are planned upon. Some governments plan, others are planned upon."

"The American future is being stolen, dribbled and bumbled away by a government that does not plan for the long range, does not know how to plan, is afraid to talk about the need for long-range planning, and is therefore outplanned at every step by major corporations who are staking out pieces of the future for themselves, as well as by foreign nations who are doing the same on a global scale."

"Failure to look at America's current economic and political crisis in terms of the next 25-50 years is costing us unmeasurable billions of dollars in lost economic and social opportunities and is leading us toward technological and military policies that threaten the survival of the entire planet."

"The U.S., in order to avoid bloodshed over the next few decades, must begin now to develop very-long-range strategies--and must invent wholly new forms of planning that involve not merely a handful of technocratic experts, but millions of ordinary citizens. We must become an anticipatory democracy...."

"...Anticipatory democracy is the only kind of democracy possible in a period of high-speed social, technological and political change. Failure to anticipate will lead to tragedy in America. By the same token, long-range thinking that is unconnected to the ideas, energy and imagination of our whole population, long-range thinking that is merely top-down, and not equally bottom-up, could also produce the end of democracy. It is only by combining long-range strategies for tomorrow with the involvement of millions in formulating goals that we can assure ourselves that there will be an America 2000."--Alvin Toffler, author of "Future Shock," in testimony before the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution, Dec. 15, 1975.

1/4 lb. salt pork, diced
1 medium onion, chopped
1 can (1 lb.) tomatoes
2 cans (1 lb. each) red kidney beans, drained
1 can (12 oz.) kernel corn, drained

1 can (3 oz.) broiled sliced mushrooms with broth
1 can (10 1/2 oz.) mushroom gravy
2 tablespoons chili powder
1/2 lb. sharp Cheddar cheese, grated
12 frankfurters

Fry salt pork crisp; drain on absorbent paper; reserve. Cook onion in two tablespoons of pork drippings until golden brown. Add next six ingredients; bring to boiling point. Lower heat; add cheese; stir until cheese melts. Cut frankfurters in thirds; add with pork bits; bring to serving temperature. Put into vacuum jar. Makes six servings.

Tar/Taste Theory Exploded.

New 9 mg. tar MERIT with 'Enriched Flavor' proves taste no longer depends on amount of tar.

Until now, cigarette flavor pretty much depended on the amount of tar that went along with it.

Regardless of "low tar, good taste" claims, regardless of fancy-filters and "space-age" filtering systems—you couldn't get high taste without high tar.

Nor low tar without low taste.

That was the theory.

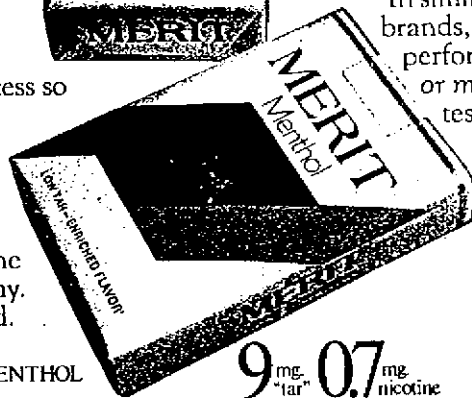

Until now.

By isolating certain "key" ingredients of tobacco in cigarette smoke, ingredients that deliver taste way out of proportion to tar, researchers at Philip Morris have developed an 'Enriched Flavor' process so successful at boosting flavor, the resulting cigarette actually delivers as much—or more—taste than brands having more tar.

Up to 60% more tar.

The cigarette is 9 mg. tar MERIT. One of the lowest tar levels in smoking today.

If you smoke—you'll be interested.

MERIT and MERIT MENTHOL

9 mg. "tar" 0.7 mg. nicotine

Taste-Tested By People Like You

9 mg. tar MERIT was taste-tested against five current leading low tar cigarette brands ranging from 11 mg. to 15 mg. tar.

Thousands of filter smokers were involved, smokers like yourself—all tested at home.*

Even if the cigarette tested had 60% more tar than MERIT, a significant majority of all smokers tested reported new 'Enriched Flavor' MERIT delivered more taste.

Repeat: delivered more taste.

In similar tests against 11 mg. to 15 mg. menthol brands, 9 mg. tar MERIT MENTHOL performed strongly, too, delivering as much—or more—taste than the higher tar brands tested.

You've been smoking "low tar, good taste" claims long enough. Now smoke the cigarette. MERIT. Unprecedented flavor at 9 mg. tar. From Philip Morris.

my FAVORITE jokes

by MILTON BERLE

EDITOR'S NOTE: Although he was a well-known comedian before 1948 when he starred on TV's Texaco Star Theatre, with that landmark variety show Milton Berle soon became America's entertainment phenomenon—"Mr. Television." Musing on his title, Berle can't resist recalling the Joe E. Lewis line: "Berle is responsible for more television sets being sold than anyone else. I sold mine, my father sold his..."

And then there was the name by which children across the country knew him, "Uncle Miltie." Berle first used it when he had a few extra minutes before the signoff of the show, telling children to listen to their "Uncle Miltie" and go to bed.

Berle's standup comedy, his timing and style, is often being imitated by other comedians. Some of his lines, especially to hecklers, have become classics—like the line he threw a woman heckler: "I remember you, madame. You heckled me here 10 years ago. I never forget a dress."

Berle's recent book, "Milton Berle, An Autobiography with Haskel Frankel," is now published in paperback.

Here are some of Berle's favorite lines, jokes, and stories:

I hear when Guy Lombardo passes away, in his will he says he's going to take New Year's Eve with him.

I love Goodman Ace's description of television. He says television is like a steak. It's a medium rarely well done.

New York went broke. Isn't it unbelievable? Only in America would you buy a property like Manhattan for $24 and wind up losing money on the deal.

A top entertainer, a singing star in Vegas some years ago, told Howard Hughes to get lost—and see what happened?

Some years ago Jascha Heifetz, the great violinist, was going to give a concert in Cleveland. The 3000-seat hall was sold out, but there was a terrible blizzard that night, with snow six to eight feet deep. At 8:20, just before his concert, Heifetz peeked through the curtain and saw an audience of only 60 people. So he walked out on the stage in street clothes and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, thanks for coming, but I can't give a performance tonight. You'll have all your money refunded." Whereupon a man stood up in the audience and said: "Mr. Heifetz, I drove 200 miles to be here. At least sing one song."

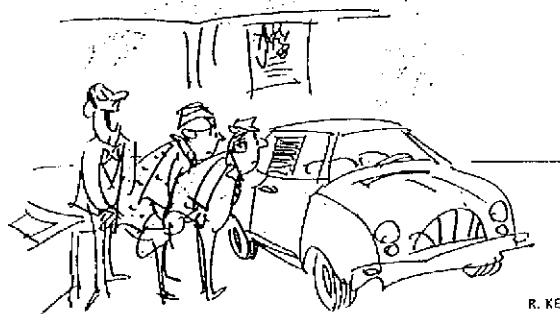

At the recent Friars dinner for my 60th anniversary in show business, I loved Johnny Carson's introduction of Howard Cosell when he said: "Here's Howard Cosell, a legend in his own mind."

I walked by an open phone booth and this guy was talking strangely into the phone. I asked: "Who are you talking to?" He said: "I'm talking to myself." I asked: "What are you saying?" He said: "I don't know, I'm hard of hearing."

Two fellas are walking down the street. It starts to rain and one says: "Open up the umbrella." The other guy opens the umbrella, and it's all tattered. So the first fella asks: "What did you bring an umbrella like that for?" And the guy with the umbrella answers: "I didn't think it would rain."

At the late Jack Benny's 80th birthday, Frank Sinatra threw a party for him in Palm Springs, and one of the guests was astronaut Alan Shepard, who flew in from Houston. Well, there were Benny, George Burns, Sinatra, myself and Shepard, who had been on the moon, talking. And Benny, who did not mean it as a joke, said: "You know this is quite a surprise. I didn't know I was going to be here tonight because last night I played a concert in Mexico City—and you have no idea how high the altitude is there!"

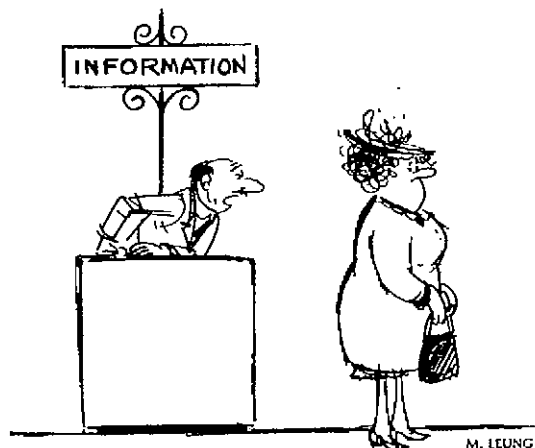

Then there's the time when the world-famous Fritz Kreisler was invited to play a violin recital for a very fashionable Palm Beach private club at a fee of $10,000. The woman, a socialite who was in charge of the event, said to him: "Mr. Kreisler, we are giving you $10,000, but I would like, I wish, that you don't mingle with the guests." And he said, "In that case, I'll gladly reduce my fee to $5000."
